LITTLE WHOLESOME ADVISE
Sir Edward Carson forgets more than his good manners when he says that the United States should mind its own business, notes the San Francisco Examiner.

We would like to call Sir Edward Carson's attention to the fact that if the United States had minded its own business the Germans would now probably be in full occupancy of England, be demanding of England the oppressive indemnities and the territorial extensions which the allies are now demanding of Germany.
If the United States had minded its own business and not take any action in regard to the late European conflict, another German house than the House of Hanover would be heirs to the throne of England, or would hold England as a dependent province, with Canada, Australia, Ireland and other parts of the British empire separated from Great Britain and at liberty to conduct themselves in individual independence, or in such confederation as they might see fit.
Even minding its own business, the United States has a perfect right to be sympathetic with Ireland.

We are supposed to be a genuinely democratic government and people, favorable to democratic institutions and republican forms of government everywhere, solicitous for oppressed nations and for weaker countries held in bondage by the military force of stronger nations.
There is not one subject nation which the convention of allied countries at Paris has released from the domination of Russia or Austria or Germany or any European power which can show the same ineradicable and uncontrovertible record of oppression, of wilfully and stupidly unjust government as Ireland can show.

There is no other subject nation in all Europe that has lost half its population in half a century as the direct result of an unjust government, antagonistic in race and religion, which because of this racial and religious antagonism has taxed Irish industries out of existence because they competed with English industries, and has reduced the whole country practically to an agricultural basis and compelled the younger and more enterprising and adventurous of the Irish people to leave the land of their birth and seek opportunities which should have been provided for them at home.

If the people of the United States have not succeeded because of the failure of their representative in Paris in releasing the oppressed nations under Great Britain's militaristic and imperialistic sway, they still feel that they have the right as citizens of this free republic to sympathize with those oppressed subject nations and to hope that they, too, in time may secure their independence as a justification for the American blood shed in this war in behalf of the liberties of the world.

The United States will mind its own business, but it will not abandon its democratic principles, its humanitarian sympathies and its international rights.
Finally, we suggest to Sir Edward Carson as a preliminary to his advising the United States to mind its own business, that he advise Great Britain to mind its own business; to stop flooding the country with pro-British propaganda and anti-Irish propaganda and propaganda opposed to everything that Great Britain is opposed to; to stop interfering with our personal and domestic affairs by plotting to control cables and news associations and American newspapers in her own interests and to the disadvantage of our American people and our American government. Criticism, like charity, should begin at home.

The Fair Notice.
Complaint has been made to the management that there is a new regulation in the Fair Book requiring that all jars used by exhibitors of preserves, jells, pickles and such things must be shown in a certain size jar. We will for this year consider this as a suggestion, but not obligatory. Many exhibitors would have to buy new jars if we enforced this rule.
