EDITORIAL COMMENT.

Washington Post: Had the Paris conference dealt in actualities and provided against real and not theatrical dangers, there would not now be torpor in the United States and unmitigated misery throughout Europe.
By this time the United States would have amassed enough of its resources to carry Europe over the abyss, and Europe would now be cheerfully active in rebuilding, instead of standing benumbed and starving. The Paris conference dealt with a myth and not with facts. It imagined that the world needed an assurance that the nations would not go to war, when the truth was that the only nations bent upon war had been disabled and could be kept powerless with ease. The failure of the victorious nations, led by the United States, to establish an actual and just peace—that is the real reason for the aimlessness and incer-titude of the United States in dealing with other nations. This virtual paralysis must persist, necessarily, so long as the government of the United States mistakes the unreal for the real.

Binghamton Press: Attorney General Palmer told a Senate committee that "the firm, strong hand of the government" finally had forced the striking miners to yield. To that statement any citizen who reads the papers and uses the American language with vigor and freedom will immediately answer—
"Bunk!"

When the miners finally did yield it was because the firm, strong hand of the government was stretched out toward the pocketbook of the individual coal consumer.

It did not need the testimony of Alfred M. Ogle, chairman of the executive committee of the operators, to convince the public that the government was afraid to fight it out on the issue raised by the Federal Court injunction.

There is no need to assume that the government was trying to bluff the miners. But there is certain no reason now for letting the Attorney General bluff the public.

New York Times: Mr. Bryan is hallowed and endeared to his party by more than his three so triumphant national campaigns. In Nebraska he has displayed his habitual skill and altruism in Democratic politics. Nebraska has a Republican Governor, a Legislature overwhelmingly Republican, a solid Republican delegation in the House of Representatives; and she has re-elected her one Republican Senator. With such good omens at home, Mr. Bryan prepares to descend upon Washington. On January 8, sacred to Andrew Jackson, that Democratic President whom, in the opinion of his admirers, Mr. Bryan so strikingly resembles, the Peerless Leader is to utter the principles—of which nobody has a larger assortment—that arise in him.

Fourteen months after the signing of the armistice, the United States is still technically at war with Germany, due entirely to the determination of President Wilson and his party supporters in the Senate to insist that the Republican majority shall not be permitted to Americanize the treaty.
