NOTICE! SOME PROGRAM.

WHERE CAN YOU SEE A BIGGER AND BETTER ONE? EVERY ONE A MASTERPIECE.

Great is the power of press and school. Wonderful the influence of church and synagogue, library and college, but it is given to this new instrument of education through the eye to do her share. Our business is incidentally to make money, but essentially to increase manhood by showing clean pictures each with a moral lesson.

THE COST OF RAISING HOGS.

Farmers, do you know what it costs you to raise hogs.

Here's an accurate piece of data on the cost of hog raising written by a pure bred Duroc breeder. This test was made under favor able conditions, and not counting time used feeding or any thing for skim milk consumed. This will show you the value of Alfalfa.

Experiment on 50 purebred hogs I have been experimenting some-what with fifty purebred hogs this year keeping an accurate account of feed cost for a period of six months.

These pigs were of March farrow and as the results of this experiment may be of interest to some hog raisers I am going to let you have it.

The sows got very little feed after farrowing except Alfalfa, and skimmed milk which was taken away from them as fast as the consumption of the pigs increased and at eight weeks old the 50 pigs were taking about all of the 25 gallons per day. I then commenced adding soaked corn and oats to the pigs ration for ten days. At that time I had them all eating good at which time they were weaned and on full feed. I then added to the ration of one pound of tankage and five pounds of shorts in their skimmed milk except that two days per week for one feed each day I substituted oil meal for shorts. I increased this ration as the pigs grew and at the end of six months it figured up about like this on a bunch of 50 shoats:

Corn used average 1 1/2 bu. per day for 110 days, 160 bu. at 50c	$ 80.00
Oats 1 bu. per day for 110 days, 110 bu. at 25c	27.50
Sorts, 1000 lbs. at average $1.40 per 100	14.00
Oil meal, 200 lbs. at $2.50 per 100	5.00
Tankage, 100 lbs. at $3.25	3.25
Total	$129.75

At the end of six months I find that I have produced 20 shoats at an average weight of 200 pounds each and 30 at an average weight of 154 pounds each, making in all a total of 8,350 pounds of pork at a cost of $129.75. I am not going to figure out the cost per pound of production, you can do that, but will figure the value of these hogs at 7c per pound is $584.50—and in fine shape for the feed yard.

The Alfalfa cost me $20.00 rent for the patch and I put up $25 worth of hay out of it besides. These shoats were in an Alfalfa pasture of about seven acres with plenty of shade trees, one row of cottonwood trees running north and south across the lot were 40 feet high and I noticed the hogs fed on the west side of these trees in the forenoon and the east side in the afternoon in the shade whereas if it had not been for these trees shading part of the Alfalfa ground they would have laid in the shed through the heat of the day instead of grazing, and to this fact I am giving part of the credit and the rest to the Alfalfa for the exceptional gains these hogs made.

A hog likes shade as well as any one on a hot day, and he is not such a bad fellow if you give him a chance, about the only difference between a hog and a man is that the hog walks on all fours, and if anything the man is the biggest hog of the two, present company excepted.
