O'NEILL SUFFERS SLIGHT REVERSES

O'Neill suffered slight reverses in the journey toward the checker and whist championships of the state down at Orchard Tuesday and Tuesday evening when the checker and whist clubs met defeat at the hands of Orchard players. The defeats were not near as bad as they would seem to a casual observer, however, and the boys have a couple of perfectly good alibis for the misfortunes. Ninety-eight games were played in the checker tournament, Orchard winning 52, O'Neill 33 and 13 being draws. No count was kept of the whist defeats.

The checker players were taken to Orchard over the Burlington early Tuesday morning by Vice President Henry Watterson Tomlinson and Secretary Parnell Golden, Ed. Eager, Dr. L. A. Carter, C. J. Malone and William Welch comprising the remainder of the party. The whist club, consisting of James A. Donohoe, T. V. Golden, S. J. Weekes, J. B. Mellor and James F. O'Donnell went down to Ewing on the 9:30 Northwestern and drove from there to Orchard, the trip being made that way to fool the wives of the club members. Mr. O'Donnell really should have gone on the Burlington as he plays with both the checker and whist teams and spent most of the time at Orchard playing checkers.

The two clubs were met by a delegation of Orchard citizens headed by Tom Drayton on their arrival and were royally entertained during the day and evening, business establishments previously having been instructed to accept O'Neill money.

Checker play started soon after the arrival of the O'Neill contingent, the pick of Antelope county's checker talent being assembled to meet them. Otto Mutschallat, James Clifton, John Jay, Dr. Gordon Fletcher, Howard Hill, E. D. Montgomery and Tom Drayton comprised the Orchard team. Montgomery is the scout who was sent up by Orchard before the Butte-O'Neill tournament to find out how the O'Neill bunch played and who drew with Larry Arnold down at the depot one night, and it is violating no confidence to state that Mr. Montgomery was not playing his best that evening.

It was the day after that engagement that the O'Neill club adopted the rule prohibiting members playing with strangers before a tournament, but the damage already had been done, the Orchard man being aware that Mr. Arnold was one of O'Neill's best players. Mr. Arnold was prevented by illness from attending the Orchard meet. Several new moves were sprung on O'Neill by the Orchard men, one being the famous double-cross play, which the boys think was responsible for their defeat. The title of this play must not be confused with the same phrase as sometimes used to define moves in ordinary affairs, but the play has about the same effect. It is the alibi for the checker defeat.

While the checker players were moving around, T. V. Golden, James Donohoe, Jesse Mellor and S. J. Weekes played whist with E. C. Rector, Henry Drayton, Fred Drayton and Tom Drayton, the latter alternating as did O'Donnell between checkers and whist. Under ordinary circumstances the Orchard whist players would have been administered a most crushing defeat, but all of the O'Neill players agreed that they never did see such a lucky bunch at drawing cards as the Orchard men. And another thing. It wasn't known until after the battle that Rector is a relative of the Drayton brothers. No one can play his best against both luck and family ties, no matter how good he is: which is the whist alibi.

Aside from these few things mentioned the trip was a most enjoyable one and O'Neill is still looking for other worlds to conquer.
