Furs.
Trapping is being carried on more extensively this season than for the last ten years, and the catch is abnormal, reports the manager of the Winnipeg Fur Auction Sales company. Economic laws work as rigidly in the far north as elsewhere. A shortage of any commodity runs prices up. Then high prices lure larger production. With the supply increased, price slumps. Then production falls off.
It's the eternal merry-go-round, with speculators playing the turn in the market.

The Amateur Detective

By WINIFRED DUNBAR

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.

"This is the office of Mr. Arnold, detective?"

"Yes," bowed Robert Prince, telling the truth but conveying a wrong impression.

Only an hour ago he had been deploring with Arnold, his friend and a man who creditably followed the detective line as a science, the fact that his life had become practically vapid, profitless, almost unendurable.

Robert Prince was world weary because he had no motive in life. He had inherited money, but not a business. He really craved to be of some practical use in the world, but did not know how to begin. He had acted so bored that Arnold had laughingly suggested that he interest himself in some detective case.

"When I get a case that will really stir up your ingenuity and inability and get that idle mind out of its dull beaten track," said Arnold, "I'm going to make you interested in it," and now a case that held his attention had come to the front. Arnold was absent from the office, but Robert allowed his caller to think he was the famous sleuth.

"That is my name," said the young girl, handing a dainty card to Robert bearing a residence address and the name, "Miss Fidella Blain." "I wish to engage your services, not in hunting down a criminal, but in recovering for me a large sum of money."

It was a clear, simple and yet startling narrative, that of the fair young girl. She had been an art student, her brother a traveling agent for a large steel firm. A sister had recently died leaving two small children. Their father was a dissolute scoundrel who had broken his wife's heart.

An uncle had left an estate to the surviving brother and sister. They had at once liquidated this and had faithfully placed a third of the proceeds in trust for the children.

This had infuriated John Barr, the brother-in-law. To quiet him, Fidella had given him a thousand dollars. When he had squandered it in gambling he returned and had since been continuously annoying them with applications for small loans.

"I tolerated him," now related Fidella, "until I had got through some matters in court where I would be appointed the guardian of the children. Mr. Barr kept coming to the house under pretence of a right to see them. Yesterday evening I locked up in my desk nearly four thousand dollars in cash and twenty thousand dollars in unregistered bonds which I received from our broker too late to take to the bank. This morning they were gone. Mr. Barr is missing and near the desk I picked up a glove with his name written on the inside lining."

"Then he must be the thief?" observed Robert.

"He must be. For the sake of the children I do not want him arrested, but I must get back the money and bonds."

"I will take the case," announced Robert.

Robert was a trifle ashamed of himself as he realized that he was simply eager to keep in the company of his fascinating client as long as possible. Remarkable good fortune rewarded his efforts. Robert finally came across a man who knew Barr who had seen him staggering home early that morning. Where was his home, inquired Robert. An hour later he pushed open the door of a room in a large office building to find lying prone across a bed—the very man he was after.

Barr seemed stupefied, drugged. Robert tried to arouse him, but could not do so.

For hours Robert watched by the bedside of the man.

Towards evening the patient was in a delirium. It seemed that Barr had intended to flee the city, but had got to drinking. He met some associates and bragged of netting a fortune. They had drugged him and had taken a satchel away from him.

"Stuffed with paper—ha! ha!" gloated the delirious Barr. "The money, the bonds safe. The key—ah, the key! They are baffled—I am rich!"

"The key—the key!" was the mad burden of the invalid. Robert noticed that he lay on one side, his naked shoulder revealed. He had observed a plaster there at the first but had left it to wear off.

It had done this in part. One edge was turned over. Something glittered. Robert investigated. He detached from under the plaster a small flat key bearing a number and the initials: "U. S. D. V."

Within two hours Robert Prince knew that key unlocked a box rented by Barr in the Union Safety Deposit vaults. Within four he had learned that the bonds and money were contained within it and that all Fidella had to do was to prove her right to it.

Barr was sent to a country sanitarium, but died within the week and a family scandal was avoided.

A week later Robert went into the office of Arnold and confessed his bold detective exploit.

"I suppose I ought to pay you a fee," he said, "for putting me in a position where I could be of service to the sweetest—dearest—"

"Ah!" smiled the shrewd detective readily—"then you have at last found something worth living for? All right. Bless you, my children, bless you!"

Where Real News Is Paramount

In the country newspaper, sensations, scandals—the recording of human misery—is almost taboo. At least it certainly is secondary to the printing of real news about people and things.

For the province of the country paper—your Home Town Paper—is to give community interests first place, printing the more or less sensational personal items only when necessary to keep faith with subscribers who pay for ALL the news.

Therefore, your Home Town Paper can give you, in full measure and overflowing, 100 per cent pure news about the people in whom you are most interested—your relatives and friends of the Old Home Town.

CAN'T DO THE WORK.

It's too much to try to work every day against a constant, dull backache, or sudden darting pain in the small of the back. Be rid of it. Try Doan's Kidney Pills. Your neighbors recommend them. Ask your neighbor.

Mrs. Minnie Bowen, O'Neill, says: "I had backache and a heavy dull pain in my kidneys that seemed to wear me all out. I couldn't get much rest at night and it was all I could do to keep at my work. There was a severe pain in the back of my head and through my shoulders. My kidneys were weak, and caused annoyance, but Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me completely."

The above statement was given June 20th, 1916, and on June 14, 1920, Mrs. Bowen added: "I still think Doan's Kidney Pills are a good kidney remedy. It has been a long time since I have had need of a kidney remedy."
