A Good Chicken House Brings Bigger Profits

You need not be a poultry expert to raise hens that produce maximum profits. A few principles carefully followed will insure bigger profits from your chickens.

One thing which is absolutely necessary, besides good equipment, is a clean properly ventilated chicken house. A concrete chicken house is permanent and sanitary, therefore economical.

Your poultry's worst enemies, rats and disease-breeding vermin, are unable to get in their work and the chickens are able to live in real quarters and grow and "lay" in the best possible manner.

There is an old saying that everything comes to those who wait. This old adage was brought forcefully to the attention of the county treasurer the first of the week. On the 15th of this month a postal card came to the county treasurer's office from E. E. Cole, postmaster at Star, Nebraska, asking for definite information in regard to a business matter. The questions were answered at once but when Mr. Cole received the letter he could not remember of asking for the information and returned the whole matter to the treasurer. Upon examination of the postal card it was found to have been dated January 14, 1916, and was in a first-class condition. Considerable speculation is being indulged in as to the location of the card for the six years and five months.
