PATRICK CHARLES CORRIGAN.

WALTER SAVIDGE AMUSEMENTS CLEAN AND ENTERTAINING

As carnivals go, the Walter Savidge Amusement Company, which is exhibiting here throughout this week, is in a class by itself. It is one of the largest and most meritorious aggregation of attractions that visits O'Neill and its management is of a kind that commends itself to a community seeking good entertainment.

System and courtesy characterize the conduct of everything on the show grounds and the people evidently appreciate the efforts made to furnish them entertainment of high standard, for the attendance has been very large.

There are riding devices of different styles, including the lately patented sensational ride known as "The Flying Sea Planes," which is a real thriller; side shows with their varied exhibitions of curiosities, all clean and wholesome, and the many novelty booths, offering attractive and useful novelties.

Mr. Savidge's mammoth canvas theatre is the feature of the amusements. It is made of special construction, affording a very large stage with abundance of special scenery and electric equipment advantageous and comfortable seating arrangement. The company of stage players appearing in this theatre are on a par with the best city companies; in fact every member was secured from city dramatic companies, we are told, and their fine portrayals of the various characters they are called upon to impersonate, stamp them all as real artists. Johnny Caylor, director of the company, plays the leading male parts, while Adelaide Irving, a California and Western Coast star, is the leading lady, and these two are supported by a cast of excellent players. Their feature play, "Over The Hills," will be offered on Friday night.

Caprice Lewis gives a very artistic and daring performance on the high trapeze each evening, as a free attraction, to start the entertainment. The Savidge Concert Band in their concerts and the orchestra with its musical programs preceding the play in the theatre, render some very pleasing music. Such good, clean amusement as is offered by the Savidge Company proves very enjoyable to
