WRAY ASKS BRYAN

SEVERAL QUESTIONS
York, Neb., Oct. 7.—The following letter has been sent to W. J. Bryan by Arthur G. Gray for his answer to four very important questions:

"1. Hon. W. J. Bryan:—As independent voters, we have heretofore received inspiration from your high ideals and have gone through party lines many times to cast a vote for you when needed.

"2. Many of us look for moral leadership from you and we believe it only fair to ask you the following questions concerning the senatorial candidacy of G. M. Hitchcock:

"3. Is it not morally wrong to support the re-election of Hitchcock who was against the Nebraska state prohibition amendment in 1917, who opposed national prohibition in the senate, who voted against the Volstead act, who recently favored a return to beer and wine and now straddles that issue, and who never has publicly announced that his former position was wrong?

"4. Is it democratic to vote for a man who opposed giving the franchise to Nebraska women in 1914, who cast the single vote in the United States senate that denied American women the right to vote for several years, who on final passage of the measure voted against the national suffrage amendment, and who at heart would now favor the repeal of the national and state suffrage amendments?

"5. Is it progressive to favor the return to the senate of a man who was for the Esch-Cummins railroad law, who did not vote on many important roll calls in the senate, whose political connection with Wall street are so close that he favored the nomination of Governor Harmon (the Wall street candidate) for president, and whose own candidacy is being supported now by special interests?

"6. Is it right to urge the election of such a man, and oppose R. B. Howell who is a life long progressive, who has a record of constructive achievement in behalf of the people without a parallel in the United States, whose views are independent and his personal life and dealings entirely honorable?"

SENATOR HITCHCOCK SPEAKS IN O'NEILL

Senator Gilbert M. Hitchcock spoke at the Knights of Columbus hall Tuesday night in the interest of his candidacy for re-election. A fair-sized audience was in attendance, both the main auditorium and the gallery or balcony being fairly well filled, and the speaker was given close attention during the entire course of his remarks. Judge J. J. Harrington presided and introduced the speaker.

Senator Hitchcock's address was divided into two sections, the first being a discussion of taxation and concluding with an appeal for the support of Charley Bryan and the democratic legislative candidates. The second section dealt with national issues and contained but a passing reference to the recent vote of the bonus bill, the senator being loath to criticize the veto for fear that some of the leading democrats in his audience might be opposed to a bonus and not desiring to give them the impression that he is unalterably for one.

The senator displayed some heat and agitation in discussing state taxes, which he said had been going up for five or six years. He neglected to state however that a portion of that time was under a democratic governor's administration and that a republican governor occupied the executive chair less than four years of the time. In his discussion of taxation the senator dealt mostly in generalities and sums total, concluding by intimating that the code department was to blame for it all, making no reference whatever to the road program, the new state capital, education and extension of state institutions, most of which things were inaugurated by the democratic administration and for which the republican administration has been left to pay.

Avoidance of detail discussion of the subjects was perhaps due to the fact that only very recently has the senator had opportunity to become personally conversant with the burdens of taxation. It was only recently, while his newspaper was complaining of the burden of taxes, that it was discovered that Senator Hitchcock's name had not appeared on the personal tax rolls of Douglas county for several years. He is the only Omaha millionaire who bears this unique distinction. When the senator was made public the senator made haste to have the oversight rectified and in so doing it turned out to be a very good thing for Douglas county. For on his last previous personal return, in 1918, he was assessed as owning $500 worth of personal property in the county, and under the old law was only assessed on $100 of that amount. In making out his personal return for 1922 he turned in personal property to the amount of $43,755, or an increase of $43,255 as over the year 1918, which really is not as imposing as it seems for one whose wealth is rated in the millions. For the year 1919 he turned in no personal property; for the year 1920, the amount of $9,702; and $19,215 for the year 1921. Realizing that the senator probably was "het up" because his name had been placed on the Douglas county personal tax rolls the audience took his statements with a grain of salt.

The tariff came in for a very large share of Senator Hitchcock's attention. He told of the times of democratic prosperity beginning with 1913, referring lovingly to high prices and wages as being responsible, and then declared that under the republican tariff it was proposed to raise prices again. How this would make good times under one administration and poor ones under another he did not attempt to explain. Deflation, he said, with the contraction of credits and the currency, brought on the hard times about two and one-half years ago, beginning with the incorporation in the republican platform of a deflation plank. Although the republicans did not come into power until almost a year after this and deflation began under a democratic president and a democratic federal reserve bank board the summer before the presidential election, the senator insisted that the republicans were to blame, although not going into details as to what kind of influence they exerted over President Wilson and the federal reserve board, and how. The senator talked dolefully of the hard times of now as compared with the good ones of but a few years ago. He reiterated that the republicans in their less than two years of control of national affairs were responsible for the stringency of more than two and one-half years duration which began with the deflation inaugurated under President Wilson. In talking of the good times previous to 1920, and comparing them with conditions under the present administration, the senator made no reference to his own personal tax schedules for the two periods, which are disclosed by the Douglas county tax records to be as follows:

Year Valuation
1916 ..... $ 4,825
1917 ..... 2,700
1918 ..... 500
1919 .....
1920 ..... 9,702
1921 ..... 19,215
1922 ..... 43,755

The assessment rate in the years 1916, 1917 and 1918 were on one-fifth valuation, so that Hitchcock paid taxes for those years on totals of $985, $540 and $100, respectively.

Note how the senator's personal property statements under democratic prosperity compared with those he has made under republican adversity.
