 Many a Gloomy Countenance In O'Neill Now Lightens With Happiness.
 A bad back makes you gloomy. Can't be happy with continual back-ache.
 The aches and pains of a bad back. Are frequently due to weak kidneys.
 Doan's Pills are recommended for weak kidneys.
 So O'Neill citizens testify.
 Ask your neighbor!
 Mrs. A. H. Jacobson, O'Neill, says: "I was troubled with my back and kidneys for a number of years before I learned of Doan's Pills. At that time I was so bad I could hardly get around and felt miserable and weak all over. Generally when I lay down at night I felt worse. My back and hips pained me and I couldn't rest properly. When I heard of Doan's Pills I tried them and it only took a couple of boxes from Stout's Drug Store to give me fine relief. In the past few years I have used Doan's occasionally when I feel my kidneys need attention and they never fail to do their work."

THE NEWS
 By MOLLIE MATHER
 (@ by Western Newspaper Union.)

JOHN GAIL walked uneasily the length of the veranda, then came to stand before Linnette, with her bright quick glance and wistful smile. Linnette was a wistful, small person altogether. Perhaps it was her soft, shy appeal, which had caught Gerald Spaulding's exacting attention. John stopped before the low chair, in which Linnette sat sewing, and looked down upon her with something like compassion in his honest gaze.
 "Friend," he began, "I want you to tell me the truth. Has Jerry Spaulding been making love to you? Because if he has—" John went on hastily, ignoring the flush of indignation which colored her cheek—"I must warn you, Linnette, that he is engaged to a girl in his own home city. Very best authority for the fact—the girl happens to be a particular friend of my mother."
 There was no bright answering glance this time from Linnette—no smile. John continued:
 "I know he has been taking you around a lot, and I know he is fascinating to women. Heaven knows why—some mysterious feminine illusion. And down in Georgia, where he spent last winter, one charmed pretty creature broke her heart over him. For-got to mention this engagement of long standing while he courted the winter months away. Nearer home there's another fine girl who believes herself engaged to him. Linnette, has Spaulding been protesting love to you?"
 The small head with its dark crown of hair was raised slowly. Linnette looked up from her work. The smile was there—it always had been a wistful smile.
 "Don't bother yourself about Gerry and me, good friend," she said. "My heart shall not be broken like that of the poor young lady in Georgia. Neither shall I believe myself to be engaged to him. This girl whom your mother knows—what is she like, John?"
 "A trusting creature, apparently. And, of course, adoring. Gerry would see to that. Linnette, I have been disturbed since he camped on your trail; feared—you—might suffer. You who are so true would see only truth in others. And if Spaulding should care for you above all others—a possibility, Linnette—even then I could see no happiness ahead. You forgive me, friend." Smiling he used the familiar term between them—"for having to warn you?"
 Linnette folded the sewing very carefully. Then she arose, and John had to take the gentle dismissal.
 When he had gone she made her way back to where the trees grew low. Gerry had sat with her often beneath one bending tree.
 The low humming of a song reached her, Gerry's vibrant tone sounding a theme through all.
 "Linnette!" he called. "Linnette!" His smile of greeting was the same, his handclasp as eager.
 "Gerald," whispered Linnette, and her face was white in the effort of speaking. "You are betrothed. Mrs. Gail is acquainted with your fiancée." Gerry was apparently amused.
 "Engaged? Not quite, my linnet. Josephine and I have been life-long friends. The engagement may be expected by our families, I'll admit. But when it happens I'll come to you with the news. So John Gail is jealous, like a vengeful woman."
 "I came," Gerry went on, "to say good-by for a time. As short, believe me, as I can make it. Business calls. And if during my absence your friend should bring tidings of my association with the fair Josephine, remember, Linnette, we have been companions, more or less, since childhood. You will give me this rose you have worn for remembrance?"
 Linnette gave him the rose. Very slowly, her wistful smile upon him, she fastened the flower to his coat.
 He recalled the appealing charm of her as the train bore him later back to the city where were his deepest interests.
 Josephine? Of course marriage would be the inevitable outcome.
 He had postponed the inevitable; perhaps as often as feasible. The little girl down in Georgia had been most entrancing. And there was the affair of Lucia, wearing an old ring of his mother's in belief of her bond to him. But Linnette with her shy enchantment would be hard to forget. He had not considered that Josephine and her family would make preparation for the day he had so faithfully planned. A wedding so near must be gone through with; unless Gerald decided to go back to the country town where Linnette lived. There was his promise to tell her, and there was the possibility that in her fondness for him she might yield to the plan of an elopement, providing his fondness for her proved as sincere as he now felt it to be. She was beneath the same bending tree where they had parted. He would try her affection abruptly. So Gerald told the news.
 "I promised to tell you, Linnette," he said. "I am to be married."
 She did not answer. Her dear face wore its old wistful, sweet charm, sweeter in some indefinable way. John Gail came across the lawn toward them.
 "Linnette has told you the news, Spaulding?" John asked. "We are married; today begins our honeymoon tour."

Real News Paramount

In the country newspaper, sensations, scandals—the recording of human misery—is almost taboo. At least it certainly is secondary to the printing of real news about people and things.

For the province of the country paper—your Home Town Paper—is to give community interests first place, printing the more or less sensational personal items only when necessary to keep faith with subscribers who pay for ALL the news.

Therefore, your Home Town Paper can give you, in full measure and overflowing, 100 per cent pure news about the people in whom you are interested—your relatives and friends of the Old Home Town.
