sent to Camp Funston, where he was assigned to the medical corps.

From there he went with his division to France and was there eleven months before being sent home after the signing of the Armistice.

Harvey was discharged from the army service in June, 1919, somewhat broken in health, but with his ambition still for a college degree so he re-entered Monmouth College in the fall of 1919 and was graduated with the class of 1920 and received the A. B. degree. It was his unusual nerve that helped him finish his college course suffering as he must have done from an infected spine.

After graduation from college he spent the summer at the farm home in an effort to regain his strength, failing to do so he went to the Government hospital at St. Louis for a surgical operation in the hope of staying the disease. He remained there until March, 1922, when he was brought home and was under the care of a nurse, most of the time his mother, confined to his bed without much change in his condition until the end of 1923. At the suggestion of the physicians in charge on New Year's day, 1923, in company with his father and mother Harvey went to southern California where he seemed to gain considerable strength and was able to get about with a cane, quite comfortably.

Anxious to see the home folks, in company with Henry Sunda, he came back to Ewing the last of August and remained here until the 21st of October, when with his father and mother he returned to California realizing the turn the disease had taken, he could not hope for recovery, but desired to end his days in the California climate where he could get about more easily when the winter came on. On the way he contracted a cold which in his weakened condition he could not throw off and he passed away peacefully on Sabbath morning.
