C. M. DALY HEARS FROM MITTENS SENT RESCUERS OF FLOYD COLLINS

Early in February, soon after the news was flashed over the wire that Floyd Collins had been entombed in Sand Cave in Kentucky, C. M. Daly of this city, manufacturer of the Hynes Rubber Mittens, at once sent a large bundle of mittens to H. T. Carmichael, general superintendent of the rescue work. Mr. Daly had not heard whether or not the mittens had reached their intended destination or whether or not they had been of service until a few days ago when he received the following letter:

Kyrook, Ky., March 10, 1925.
Mr. C. M. Daly, Mgr.,
Hynes Rubber Work Mitten Co.,
O'Neill, Nebraska.

Dear Sir: For some time I have wanted to write you a note of thanks for your generosity and thoughtfulness in sending us a supply of Rubber Work Mittens for use of those working at Sand Cave in the attempted rescue of the unfortunate Floyd Collins.

These Mittens were of great service to those engaged in excavating the Shaft and handling the rough timbers and were a wonderful help throughout the operations. Albert Marshall, one of our mainstays in the Shaft, cut his hand severely but after having the wound dressed and with the use of your mittens was able to continue at work.

Although we failed to reach the poor fellow in time, you have with the rest of us who helped, the satisfaction of having done all you could.

Thanking you for your co-operation,
Yours very truly,
H. T. CARMICHAEL.
