A Hot Day Causes Many More Telephone Calls

A very hot day will often cause as many as one-fourth more telephone calls. On such days, more people stay indoors and use the telephone.

Rainy days and very cold days also mean that more telephone calls will be made.

Snow storms, likewise, add to the problem of providing service by tying up transportation and causing people to transact their business by telephone. And frequently sleet storms tear down poles and wires, shutting off service.

Uniformly satisfactory telephone service is our constant aim, but occasionally conditions arise which are temporarily beyond all human control. At such a time we especially appreciate the patience of our patrons until the situation can be met.
