

QUALIFYING TO BECOME AN AIRMAN

They put you through a pretty stiff examination nowadays before they'll let you go in for flying. Here are some of the tests you'll be asked to submit to. Upper left: Pilot Dean Lamb of the Air Associates, Inc., using the perimeter on himself to show just how much "eagle eyed" aspirants for air licenses are. Dr. William J. Francis, medical examiner of the Branch Department of Commerce at New York, and Nurse Mary Loweree are looking on. Upper right: Giving another eye test. Lower left: The doctor explains to Pilot Lamb how the apparatus measures the "depth perception" of applicants. Lower right: Taking the blood pressure test. Hundreds of civilians are going through these examinations weekly, in the aviation fever which is now sweeping America. (International Newsreel)
