The Rural Interests

Chicago Journal of Commerce When farm unrest is spoken of, there is a necessary implication that the unrest prevails not only among the farmers but to some degree among other elements in the rural regions.

In a newly issued bulletin by the Bureau of Business Research of the University of Illinois, dealing with conditions which have caused a decline with conditions which have caused a decline in the sales of village merchants in Illinois, it is duly noted that the increased mobility of trade, due to the automobile and paved roads, has an important effect; but, after that effect is allowed for, the fact remains that a considerable part of the village merchant's troubles is due to conditions which check the farmer's prosperity.

Business English

From Harper's Magazine. A singular branch of learning, feated by more than a score of American universities, is known as "Business English." AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE

One hundred and fifty years ago the British colonies in America, after long and prayerful thought, declared their independence of British allegiance. The anniversary of the date of the action is celebrated as if the declaration were passed spontaneously in a burst of indignation and wholly under the inspiration of an aggressive and unanimous demand for independence.

But the declaration was all the more fraught with high purpose because it was made as the climax of a series of challenges to the authority of British injustice. Its ringing language shook the allegiance of the Tory colonists, three out of every ten, who refused to break their ties to the mother country.

This country was 20 years building its character around the principle of independence—20 years from the Boston massacre to the first inauguration of Washington as president. In that time its faith in the principle of independence was expressed in every form from mild protest to death in battle.

Today the United States is the only first-class power which has not an opportunity to become a member of the League of Nations. Behind that decision is a century and a half of growing faith in the thought that was uppermost in the minds of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

Emphasized the Issue

From Des Moines Register. No matter what anybody may say about it, Governor Lowden's withdrawal at Kansas City because the platform plank on agriculture is evasive, and because the speeches of its advocates were purposely misleading else could fix. But for that the farm demonstration would be regarded as one of the customary features of convention time and be dismissed the moment the convention was adjourned.
