Salmon Once More

Five ex-service men were gathered at a table in a restaurant recently. The waiter, asked to suggest something in the cold meat line, said there was some good salmon on the menu. Only one of the five took the suggestion. The other four agreed they had enough during the war to last them a lifetime. -Detroit News.

The Circus Becomes a Big Business

The glamour of circus day will still grips young and old, just as it did father in the "90's," and grandfather in his boyhood. The medieval pomp and pageantry under the "big top," the wild animals, the side show freaks, laugh provoking clowns, elephants and daring acrobats have the same lure as in the wagon show era, when John Ringling and his brothers entered the circus business.

No longer however, does the circus go from town to town by wagon, with a few half starved animals, a sickly elephant, one ring performance, and all kinds of skin games and questionableshows to fleeca public. Sunday, the Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey circus, a merger of the two giants in the field, came to Aberdeen in four long trains. John Ringling, now a millionaire, and a Florida resort owner, still retains the circus as a hobby, and came to Aberdeen in his private car.

The circus has entered the realm of big business, and its employes are high class people, "just folks," such as inhabit the average city. Sunday and Monday, Aberdeen became acquainted with many of the circus employes and frankly liked them.

In the labor crews are some of the undesirable riff-raff, which follows every show but they are well handled, and there is little of the pickpocket epidemic that once kept city officers busy. The cry "hey Rube" which once rallied every fighting circus hand when trouble threatened, is not today heard on the show lot.

Circus people enjoyed their holi-day here Sunday, and their conduct brought out the great change that has come to the modern show and its personnel. There was not the carousing, drinking, fighting and gambling that brought the show people into disrepute 30 and 40 years ago.

P. T. Barnum, who was the Tex Rickard of early show days, or-ganized the "greatest show on on earth," and perfectly practiced his Barnum's policy was anything to get the money, and like a famous railroad president, he thought, "the public be damned." His show was no worse than all others of his day.

Yesterday we had a glimpse of a modern circus, a giant business enterprise, representing millions in capital, and run as high class entertainment. The Ringlings have now a contact man, who stands between the public and the circus exactly as does many a big corporation. He addresses service clubs, schools and churches, and eases the way for the

"There was a time when cream was cream," says a writer in the New York World tantalizingly. "You put it in your coffee and it produced a mixture that was rich yellow-brown in color, wth thick, rich streaks in it that eddied and curled and remained visible after a full minute of stirring, and with, here and there, floating on the top, a friendly, buttery lump.

"Yes," writes the Drifter, in the Nation, "There was indeed a time when cream was cream. It was about the same era as that when men were men and has an irre-trievably dissappeared. Cream now, at least in our great cities, is, as the writer in the World regretfully concludes, only 'another name for

'You put it into your coffee, and it produces a mixture that is not yellow-brown at all but a dull graybrown. The streaks are thin, and gle the spoon, if not sooner. As for lumps let us not be facetious with a serious subject. It has been so long since the average citizen saw a lump that if one did accidentally get into his cup he would fish it out under the impression that it was an impurity, probably a piece of

"A sad picture. But one from which we cannot truthfully dissent. So let us read further: " 'It is still possible, of course, to obtain cream. It is possible, that is, if you are privy to the fact that the cream language has undergone the same kind of change that the egg language has undergone. Even a schoolboy knows nowadays that you do not get a fresh egg by asking for a "fresh egg." You do not get it even by asking for a "strictly fresh egg." You do not get it even by asking for a "guaranteed fresh " You do not get it even by asking for a "select egg." What you do is ask for a "strictly fresh guaranteed extra fancy jumbo select egg." Then you get a plain fresh egg.

"In the case of cream, what you ask for is double cream. That means cream. But it is obvious that double cream is a luxury reserved for the man who eats his meals at home. He can request his wife to have the milkman leave it, and then drink his coffee with complete enjoyment. But the man who eats in restaurants is not so fortunately situated. He is, in fact, quite helpless.

"With al apologies to the writer in the World," says the Drifter, "it is contended that it is necessary to do more than speak to the milkman in order to get cream that is cream. It is necessary to go back to the farm of one's chidhood where the mlk was put n a sprnghouse in shallow pans and the cream was skkimmed off-not too closely-by hand. Such cream was almost numpkin-yellow in hue gurgling and splashing from the pitcher in what a modern advertising man might call 'lumps of lusciousness.' Such cream was cream.
