

YOUNG WASTREL TO BE PAROLED

Nebraskan Will Have Opportunity to Repay $13,000 He Embezzled

LINCOLN, NEB.—(UP)—Nate House, of Broken Bow, who wants to leave the penitentiary so he can restart his life and pay back the $13,000 which he embezzled, has been given his chance by the board of pardons, but he must serve at least one more year in the state prison.

House's sentence of from one to three years on each of six counts of embezzlement and forgery, was commuted to six years with all good time allowed. The board of pardons announced as its decision in the appeal for commutation heard September 13 House began serving his term May 8, 1926, so he will have to serve about a year and one month before he will be released.

At the hearing September 10, Custer county people told the story of a young man who had hardly known the value of a dollar. Some of these persons had lost money through House's actions but they asked for clemency for the young man. House's father, a Broken Bow businessman for nearly 40 years, left a large and prosperous business to his son upon his death.

When he was married, young House spent more than $2,500 on his honeymoon. An illness suffered by his wife necessitated an operation that added $8,000 to his indebtedness. This, together with the slump in land values following the war, brought on the financial stress which wrecked the business and sent House to the penitentiary. Then followed financial manipulations and the money obtained in each case was used to pay off some other obligation.

Hubert L. Munger, serving a nine-year sentence for burglary of the Middlebrook department store at York, was denied his request for commutation of his sentence. Neal Olson, special agent for the Burlington, made a strong plea for the release of Munger. When arrested and brought to Nebraska, Munger decided to "go straight," and told the Nebraska officers everything he knew in connection with the York robbery.

IRRIGATED FARMS TO PAY DIVIDENDS IN NEBRASKA
GRAND ISLAND—(UP)—Irrigation is taking the "ou" out of drough in Hall county as the farmers become "irrigation-minded" and increased yields result with the additional water.

Neill Slack, farming southwest of Wood River, estimated that irrigation has given him a margin of at least 30 bushels an acre of corn. He has irrigated 125 acres, of which 80 acres are in corn. With corn selling at approximately 90 cents a bushel, he estimates the irrigation has brought him this year an additional $2,000. Three years ago his cost of irrigation an acre was $2.40 for tractor expense and 60 irrigation well cost him $1,200, and cents an acre for fuel. He expects a yield of from 40 to 50 bushels an acre.

John Wortman also has irrigation on the farm he occupies and the well put in last fall, pumping 1,000 gallons a minute, has given him a yield of approximately 60 bushels to the acre.

There are 27 well irrigation plants within a radius of 10 miles of Wood River and the drough havoc of the past years has been decreased.

ESTATE MATTER TO HIGH COURT

Relatives of Burt County Man Not Able to Agree on Division

LINCOLN, NEB.—(Special)—An appeal to the supreme court has been filed by a number of nephews and nieces of William Hayes, a former resident of Burt county, who died in 1928 leaving most of his property to another niece, Mrs. Emma V. Osborn, a resident of Wenatchee, Wash. The other heirs who got nothing instituted a will contest, and while it was pending they offered to pay Mrs. Osborn $2,500 if she would relinquish her interest in the property. She came back with a proposal that if they pay her $3,000 she would make the necessary deed. This was accepted by the other heirs but she did not supply the deed as agreed. They brought suit to compel performance of the contract, but the lower court said they had no case.

Letters attached to the petition in error show that Mrs. Osborn notified the heirs that her husband thought she was giving away $7,000 and refused to sign the deed. The heirs thereupon agreed to take a deed without his signature. Mrs. Osborn, in one letter, ascribed this refusal on the part of her husband to "that streak of pure cussedness under the skin of most he things."

It is not considered likely owners of the bridge will consider the proposition, President J. N. Shannahan recently setting a flat price of $4,155,296 on the structure. A new bridge would cost from $1,500,000 to $2,650,000, depending on kind of material used, it is said.

DEFUNCT BANK DEAL IS AIRED

Certain Depositors Favored by Liquidating Agent Is Charge

BRIDGEPORT, NEB.—(UP)—A tale of how some depositors were favored by being permitted to withdraw their deposits in full while the Bridgeport State bank was being operated as a "going concern" by the Guaranty Fund commission was expected to be recounted Tuesday by witnesses at the public hearing of the state bank investigation.

The hearing is the first of its kind to be conducted under the banking investigation and Lee Bayse, special counsel for A. C. Schallenberger, is chief investigator.

Thus far the hearing as disclosed alleged favoritism to a few depositors in allowing them to withdraw their money at the expense of the other depositors. The records show withdrawals permitted before the final receivership totaled about $300,000, Bayse said.

Charles J. Burke, who managed the bank under the guaranty fund commission, admitted the withdrawals may total $100,000. From the records were read deposits which were withdrawn in full while Burke was in charge. These included L. W. Hurd, $17,000; Dr. Victor Anderson, $48,000; W. B. Coulter of the lower house in the Nebraska legislature, $6,150; Walter Aebeg, $5,000.

Bayse asked Burke concerning a lot belonging to the bank and valued at $750 in the records. Mrs. Burke bought the lot for $350 and later resold it for $750, Bayse said. Burke declared he had nothing to do with the deal, as Mrs. Burke talked with J. W. Rodgers of Lodge Pole, then guaranty fund commission member. Burke denied his wife had resold the lot for $750.

Mark Spanogle, former cashier of the bank, testified that in 1925 he suggested that the bank be placed in receivership and liquidated. If this had been done, he said, the depositors would have been paid from 60 to 70 per cent instead of 10 per cent.

Nearly $150,000 was spent for management while the bank was operated by the commission, he said.
