J. B. FARNSWORTH WRITES FROM PORTLAND, OREGON

Portland, Oregon, June 6, 1930

Editor Frontier, O'Neill, Nebraska,
Dear Editor:

The near approach of Flag Day impels me to write you of a matter I have long had in mind. It is this:

What became of the flag that Company M, 3rd Nebraska Volunteers, carried through the Spanish War? Was it ever officially turned over to Holt County? It should be on display at the Court House at O'Neill in the same manner as the Regimental Colors and Flag are displayed in the Capitol building at Lincoln. Can you let me know if this has been done?

On Memorial Day, I marched through our city streets with some 150 of my comrades of '98. At the note of the bugle we were off, every man in step with the old army swing of the long-gone service days. Oh, the memories that were awakened and came flooding through my mind to an almost overwhelming degree. I was a boy again, in camp at O'Neill. There were the County Commissioner with the flag, and Captain Cross accepting in behalf of Company M, promised it should be returned to Holt County in honor, at any cost.

Then on to Omaha for regimental muster, and from there to the fever-stricken camp at Jacksonville, Florida. Here, with scores of others, I was furloughed home on sick leave, in October, under circumstances that have burned into my memory that can never be effaced. As our train got under way, there was the crash of the firing squad's rifles, for two cars were filled with the bodies of comrades of northern regiments; they had given the "last full measure of devotion" and were going Home, not on a furlough, but to occupy little green tents whose portal never outward swings, there to await the Great Commander's final reveille.

"On fame's eternal camping ground Their silent tents are spread, While Glory guards with solemn round The bivouac of the dead."

Sixty days of Holt County's bracing air and I was back to the regiment at Savannah, Georgia, feeling as good as ever. From Savannah the 3rd left for Cuba, arriving in Havana harbor early in January, 1899, and what a wonderful sight greeted us as we entered the harbor. Grim old Morro Castle and Cabanas fortress guarding the entrance and the beautiful city of Havana on the green shores of Cuba in the distance, and our great flag, the Stars and Stripes, hoisted toward the dock, the ship's band, stationed on the deck, playing strains of the "Star Spangled Banner" rolling across the bay to greet the populace waiting on the shore to bid us enthusiastic welcome.

On February 15, 1899, a battalion of the 3rd took part in the first memorial service at the "Colon" cemetery in honor of the victims of the battleship Maine disaster.

In our camp near Havana we tented near the 7th Cavalry and what a bugler they had. When the hour for Taps approached, we would listen for the calls from the different regiments, as they were sounded in rotation, and as we listened, watch the flickering candles in the tents along the Company street and perhaps, somewhere near, hear "Speck" Sherry singing "Shadow of the Pines," and boy! how "Speck" could sing, too. Then the bugle calls would begin, first one and then another, all along the line until, as a grand finale the bugle from the Seventh rent the blackness of the tropical night, then all was still. Then check roll—a quiet step outside and Charley Hall's voice came out of the darkness, inquiring "All in here?" Charley's voice has long since been stilled.

The whole First Division knew and loved Lieutenant Hall; for no better officer ever wore the Army blue. What a man he was.

On April 7th we broke camp and started for the transport Manitoba, lying in the harbor. And right here I want to relate an incident of that hike along the dusty Cuban road into the city. The clouds of dust from so many marching feet obstructed the view of everything except the closest objects; suddenly up in front the band struck up Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever" and, as if so ordered, a gust of wind momentarily swept aside the clouds of dust, disclosing the Flag at the head of Company M's column, in victory and in honor, on the way back to Holt County.

Respectfully,
J. B. Farnsworth,
