UNCLE SAM'S PLANTING POINTERS

By Furman Lloyd Mulford, Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture

Proper cutting of rose blossoms allows not only better length of stems of cut flowers, but also leaves bushes in better condition to produce more blossoms.

Cut bush roses with stems as long as possible. Not more than two buds or eyes should be left on the stub below the cut. If stems are not more than six inches long it will be best to cut many of the roses back to the old stem, leaving no stub. When it can be done without would be well to cut even some of the old wood with flowers.

For fine flowers on long stems, with a prospect of more flowers for a long season, vigorous hybrid tea roses should have been cut back to a height of not over 15 inches last spring before growth started and usually it is better when they are cut back to a foot or less. Tea roses should have been pruned in much the same way, and hybrid perpetuals left as long as 15 to 18 inches.

For Long Stems In fertile soil such spring pruning will produce blossoms at the end of stems at least 12 and 18 inches long. By leaving one or at most two buds at the base of such a stem when flowers are cut new strong shoots will push out that in turn will give fine roses on the long stems later on.

If the bush was pruned lightly in the spring a mass of short-stemmed roses will result and there is a less satisfactory second crop.

Flowers of climbing hybrid tea roses may be cut in much the same way as outlined, while the double flowered forms of the rambler roses are usually borne on long stems that may be cut for indoor decoration as are bush roses, but there will be no second flowering from the base of stems. If long sprays of roses are needed for decoration the main stems of rambler roses may be cut without injury to the plant.

Ten Commandments of Good Organization

- 1. Define and clean up responsibilities should be assigned to each executive.
2. Responsibility should always be coupled with corresponding authority.
3. No change should be made in the scope or responsibilities of a position without a definite understanding to that effect on the part of all persons concerned.
4. No officer or employe, occupying a single position in the organization, should be subject to definite orders from more than one source.
5. Orders should never be given to subordinates over the head of a responsible officer.
6. Criticisms of subordinates should, whenever possible, be made privately, and in no case should a subordinate be criticized in the presence of officers or employes of equal or lower rank.
7. No dispute or difference between officers or employes as to authority or responsibilities should be considered too trivial for prompt and careful adjudication.
8. Promotions, wage changes, and disciplinary action should always be approved by the officer immediately superior to the one directly responsible.
9. No officer or employe should ever be required, or expected, to be at the same time an assistant to, and critic of, another.
10. Any officer whose work is subject to regular inspection should, whenever practicable, be given the assistance and facilities necessary to enable him to maintain an independent check of the quality of his work.

Really Thoughtful Act of Modern Daughter

"This is the age of selfishness," declares Kate Lee Stahl, the social worker. "Or maybe it is just thoughtlessness. I am not sure which. At any rate, the young girl of today seems to think and do everything but housework. She leaves that to mother.

"Not long ago, I was instrumental in helping a young girl get a start in life and shortly after, when I met her on the street, I asked her how things were going at home. "Oh, just fine," she cried. "Why, just think, last week I was able to buy mother a nice vacuum cleaner." "That was very thoughtful of you." "Yes, I guess it was. You see, mother is a little stiffened up with rheumatism and used to feel so sorry to see her trying to use a broom that I always left the house on sweeping day."—Los Angeles Times.

Robin's Hard Luck

An industrious robin came to a sad end at Lewiston, Maine, when he attempted to overdo in the matter of building himself a home. Happening on a rather long piece of twine, the little bird flew to the top of an elm tree with it in his mouth. There he became entangled in his burden and shortly found himself suspended about five inches from a small branch with the string wrapped around his neck. He was taken from this precarious position about half an hour later, but he could not be revived.

His Jinx Active

From now on William Higginson of Medicine Bow, Wyo., plans to walk when he wants to go any place. He recently stepped in the way of a horse's kick and emerged with a broken leg. He was placed in an automobile and rushed toward Laramie for medical attention. The car hit some loose gravel and smashed into a pole. Higginson finally reached the hospital with a broken arm to match his broken leg.
