Nebraska Farmer Demonstrates Corn Not All He Can Grow

Benkelman, Neb.—(UP)—Sauerkraut for an army could have been made from the crop of 10 tons of cabbage grown on the farm of George N. Pringle, near here, this year.

Pringle proved to surrounding farmers that possibilities of western Nebraska soil are being overlooked when he planted nine acres to cabbage this year. His bank books show a profit of $4,500 from the crop, or an average income from each acre of $500.

Other reports of minor crop productions in the state during the last season include that of Carl Smith, Scottsbluff county farmer, who planted 14 acres to beans after a sugar beet crop had failed. Smith showed receipts of $102.60 an acre, and a clear profit of $75 an acre after the cost of production had been subtracted.

Various reports of profitable production of clover, alfalfa and blue grass seed have been made.

CONSUMERS WARNED ABOUT STORAGE EGGS

Lincoln, Neb.—Nebraska egg consumers were urged Saturday by O. V. McCracken, head of the pure food department of the state, to guard against the substitution of cold storage for fresh eggs in making purchases.

Investigation over the state, he said, revealed that numerous grocers were marketing cold storage eggs in that manner.

"Fresh eggs are scarce this time of the year, and should sell for more than cold storage eggs. Good storage eggs, however, are a wholesome food and contrary to the opinion of many they have not been in storage for more than one year," McCracken stated, explaining the Nebraska laws forbid the holding of eggs longer than 12 months.

Purchasers he said, should insist that they know whether they are buying a fresh egg or a cold storage egg.

Mr. McCracken called attention to the candling law that compels the inspection of eggs the year around with the exception of January, February, March and April. Householders also should carefully scrutinize advertisements and should not be misled by statements that "top quality eggs" are always "fresh country eggs."
