

Niagara Folks in Winter Clothing

No matter where you see it, it's Winter just the same. Above, the season's first snowfall adds a striking touch of glistening beauty and muffling the roar of the thundering cataract. Old King Winter is still the daddy of all artists.

Collecting Indian Skulls for Hobby

As weird a hobby as you'll find anywhere is that over Catalina Island, Cal. Here he is shown as he exhibits which Ralph Glidden waxes enthusiastic. He collects his treasures to Winifred Vitalich and Kay Marinovich in his "museum" at Los Angeles.

Can't Bear to Miss His Bottle

This baby beaver, one of the entries at the annual pet show in Madison Square Garden, New York, was reared on the bottle. And now, although he is getting too big for that sort of thing, he refuses to do without it. Raymond Bishop, a little visitor to the show is shown ministering to his wants. All kinds of pets, from a goldfish to an elephant, are on view as their owners contest for prizes.

Distinguished Now

Although this 17-year-old Viennese girl, Poldi Milner, has been acclaimed abroad for playing as a guest soloist with famous orchestras, she was held up by Uncle Sam when she arrived at New York recently. The law says that a foreign artist cannot land here unless he or she is distinguished. So Poldi had to prove that she knew her stuff before Uncle Sam relented.

Martial Harmony

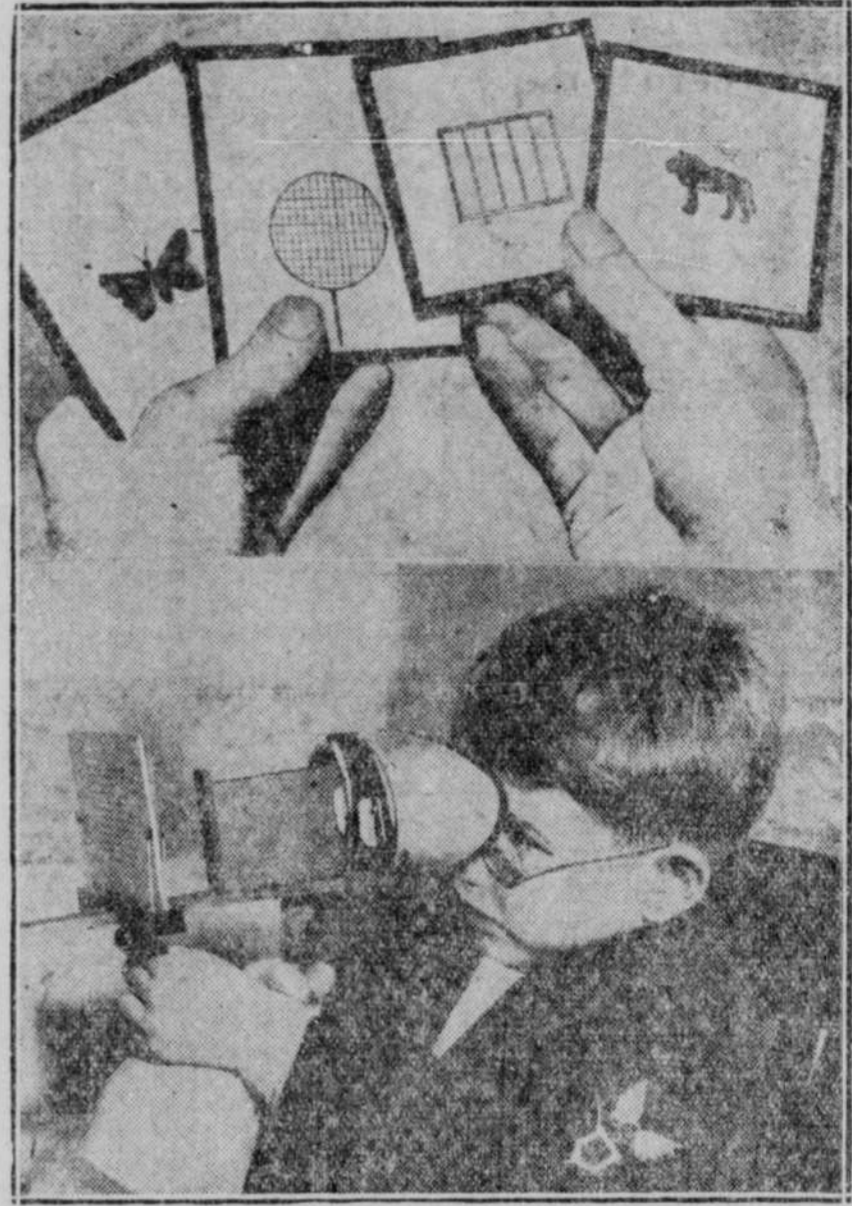

"You've Got Me in the Palm of Your Hand," might be the theme song for this picture, showing Paul Whiteman, King of Jazz, as he playfully assists his wife, the former Margaret Livingston from the train on their arrival at New York from the Coast. If you think Paul has reduced his tonnage, all the credit goes to wife, who keeps him on a diet.

Canning Champ

Many a champion was crowned at the live stock show in Chicago recently. We had corn-husking champions, stock-judging champs, and now here's the canning champion. She is Miss Wanda Guthrie, 15, shown with some of the preserves that won her the title.

Good Game for the Eyes

Here's one "medicine" that Johnny doesn't mind taking. It is an eye correction exercise, arranged like a game. The cards (upper photo) are placed in the synoptophore as shown below. The trick is to get the butterfly in the net or the lion in the cage. While the child is playing he is correcting a crossed optic nerve or some other defect in vision.

Remembering War Dead

Notwithstanding the unsettled political situation of his country and the added burden it places on his shoulders, President Paul Von Hindenburg, of Germany, still finds time to remember his war-time comrades. Here the 85-year-old soldier-statesman is shown as he paused to make a contribution to the fund for the upkeep of the graves of Germany's war dead as he entered the Garrison Church in Berlin for services.

Working Up

Henry Cardozo, nephew of Justice Benjamin Cardozo, of the United States Supreme Court, is shown at his job as a driver for a Chicago laundry. The boy is studying law at night with the determination to follow in the footsteps of his distinguished uncle.

Satin Smartness

The charming afternoon ensemble worn here by Charlotte Sasa, 34-C-M player, is of white satin, set off with mink fur bands on the short flaring sleeves of the jacket-dress. Two satin flowers decorate the lapels. A high waistline effect is given by the wide girdle that is ornamented with a row of satin-covered buttons.
