HITLER TAKES THE WHEEL.

Adolph Hitler, the former Austrian house painter, has become the head of the German government. His ascendancy has not brought the crash in the world's securities markets which would have been inevitable a year ago. Wall Street took but a passing interest in the affair and the following day on the stock exchange was the quietest of the year.

More than one reason has been assigned for this. It is said that the world has had so many shocks it can now contemplate almost anything without getting excited. It is declared that the Hitler bogey is not so fearful as it was a year ago and that he will be more conservative than was expected, because of his accession to power. Then the optimists assert that our financial markets have steadied so much during the year that they are almost shock proof. Let us hope there is at least a little truth in this last contention.

Anyhow Hitler now has his chance to demonstrate. He may become another Mussolini and then again he may not. If he is successful he will get the plaudits of the world, and if he fails he will soon be forgotten. He will now find his road much more difficult than it has been heretofore. As a leader of the minority he could criticize without stunt and promise everything. But now the time of promising has passed and he must begin to perform. Can he make good on the extravagant promises and satisfy the people who have elevated him to power? If so, all well and good; if not he will have the sad experience of many politicians who have gone on before.

COOLIDGE COINED

MANY EPIGRAMS.

The following are a few of the epigrams that studded the public utterances of Calvin Coolidge, as compiled by the Associated Press:

We need a faith that is broad enough to let the people make their own mistakes.

No great question has ever been decided by the people of this nation on the sole basis of dollars and cents.

When the times have called for a good man someone has stood forth.

That state is most fortunate in its form of government which has the aptest instruments for the discovery of laws.

Men do not make laws. They do but discover them. Laws must be justified by something more than the will of the majority. They must rest on the eternal foundation of righteousness.

Little progress can be made by merely attempting to repress what is evil; our great hope lies in developing what is good.

The school is not an ending but only the beginning of an education.

I sometimes wish that people would put a little more emphasis upon the observance of the law than they do upon its enforcement.

I am a republican, but I cannot on that account shield any one because he is a republican. I am a republican but I cannot on that account prosecute any one because he is a democrat.

Promises and good intentions are not enough. We cannot afford rash experiments.

I am all through looking for ideal candidates for public office. They don't exist. We have to make the best of what we have, for it is only in that way we are able to make any progress.

The resources of our country are sufficient if we use them to help each other.

There is only one form of political strategy in which I have any confidence, and that is to try to do the right thing.

I do not choose to run.

We draw our presidents from the people. It is a wholesome thing for them to return to the people. I came from them. I wish to be one of them.

Traffic Policeman: Hey, you! Didn't you hear me yelling for you to stop?
Motor Fiend: Oh! was that you yelling? I thought that was just somebody I had run over.

"So when you was on yer holidays where did you stop at?"
"Nothin', dearie, notin."

Abraham Lincoln

February 12, 1809 to April 14, 1865

UNFLINCHINGLY he kept the helm while those he trusted best failed him. Farseeing, looked beyond the issues of the day; when others cried for conquest and subjection, he labored for the day that would see North and South united again. His goal achieved, he died on the threshold of his glory. But the lessons he taught us guide us today, and Abraham Lincoln belongs to all mankind. He was one of the worlds immortals.
