'Toot-Toot, Tootles!'

THE hour was close to midnight when Georgie Blake turned the corner of the street where Mabel Porter lived. Georgie walked as one in a trance, his ukulele tucked securely under his arm. Mabel's house was in darkness, her bedroom window faced the street and was close to the fireplace chimney. It was Georgie's plan to stand in the shadow of the chimney and pour forth his heart. He knelt outside the hedge that bordered the lawn and was startled to see a figure looming in his chosen spot. Suddenly the still night air was broken by the melodious tones of an alto saxophone.

"Tootles Walsh!" Georgie growled. "Why?" "Tootles could play a saxophone and he did a commendable piece of work on the 'Blue Danube.' Mabel's golden head appeared at the window sill and her arm gleamed momentarily in the moonlight. A flower dropped into Tootles' anxious hand. Mabel and Tootles began to whisper. Georgie, to his eagerness to hear them, crept further along behind the hedge. His hand touched something that began to squash, an unidentified garden product lost from a grocer's wagon many days previous. Tootles moved carelessly into the moonlight, his face uplifted to catch Mabel's slightest word. A dark object sped swiftly across the face of the moon and descended with accuracy upon his head.

At this precise moment the awful figure of Mabel's father charged around the corner of the house, Tootles, letting out another yelp, scuttled around the opposite corner and could be heard clanking over the back fence. While Georgie, no less startled and upset by Mr. Porter's stark avenging figure, leaped out to the middle of the street and away.

Georgie expected that he had heard the last of the troubadour incident, but he soon learned otherwise. He found it was difficult to make a date with Mabel. Tootles Walsh was the lucky boy. No, Mabel didn't know when she could give Georgie a date. In fact, she was rather choice of her company. People who threw over-ripe tomatoes at unsuspecting persons were not her kind, thank you.

"You're welcome," Georgie rejoined shortly. "What is your kind?" he demanded. "The intelligentsia," Mabel answered haughtily. "That must be Tootles and his bunch," Georgie snapped. "I suppose they're smarter'n garage mechanics!" "Well, they don't throw vegetables at people!"

One Sunday morning the pastor announced that on the coming Wednesday evening at eight o'clock sharp the Ladies' Aid would hold its annual ice cream social. Music would be furnished by Mr. Frederick Walsh, accompanied at the piano by Miss Mabel Porter. Georgie saw here and there the nodding heads and the knowing glances. Tootles and Mabel. They were a dear pair. Georgie felt ill.

"... The Blue Danube," the pastor said, finishing his announcement. A hush settled over the audience. Tootles stepped to the front of the platform. He nodded confidently to Mabel and set his lips to the saxophone. He blew.

"Moo-oo!" blurted the instrument nasally. Tootles looked surprised. He snapped the stops and nodded again. "Moo-hoo!" It sounded so funny people had to laugh. Georgie hugged himself when somebody yelled, "Give that calf more rope!" Tootles turned a brick red. He seemed to wilt under the merciless storm of laughter. Then he peered into the bell of the saxophone. He thrust in his hand and pulled out a long chain of frankfurters. He grinned sheepishly and mumbled something about the horn of plenty.

The audience thought it was an act, and after Mabel and Tootles finished their repertoire it crowded about the platform to congratulate them. Georgie was not there. Somehow luck was not with him in regard to Tootles Walsh. He hurried out to the church lawn and went directly to a spot in the hedge where he had hidden his ukulele. Tucking it under his arm he started up the lonely street.

The click-clickety-click of high heels on the cement walk behind him made Georgie turn. It was Mabel. She was coming to accuse him no doubt of putting those frankfurters in Tootles' horn. He started to hurry, but she caught up with him.

"Georgie." "Uh-huh?" "You mad with me, Georgie?" "No-oo." "I'm sorry that snob Tootles played so well." "What!" Georgie stopped abruptly.

"I stuffed his old horn full of frankfurters," Mabel confessed. "He's stupid," she added furiously. "Intelligentsia! Fiddlesticks!" "Amen," Georgie said solemnly. He began to pick dreamily on the ukulele strings. Mabel hummed the tune, a simple lilting tune that seemed to blend perfectly with the young summer's night that surrounded them.

PATCHWORK QUILTS AND QUILTING

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

The "Double Wedding Ring" shown below is the most popular quilt known. Its name is attributed to the following story:

Following the Civil war quilt making was very popular. Grandma had in her collection a quilt she was saving for her grandchild's wedding. Jane's fiancé, who had been wounded in the battle of Antietam in 1862, spent many years in the hospital, but finally returned home and the wedding was planned. "Grandma," said Jane, "we will not have our wedding rings until later." Grandma, however, solved the problem. "My child, I'll furnish the rings. You shall have my favorite quilt and we will call it the Double Wedding Ring."

In those days making of quilts depended on materials that could be found in the home, and also the artistic ability of the maker. Cutting patches accurately and drawing neat designs for quilting were important steps in making a good-looking quilt. Today, with the many helps for quilt makers, thousands of quilts are made in much shorter time than in Colonial days. Here are some modern ways that will make work easy and produce quilts that you will be proud of.
