Anyway, those newest babies were quite safe, because they were too young to crawl out even if they should waken, which they were not likely to do because their little stomachs were full. Little Meadow Mice are like other babies in that when their stomachs are full they sleep and grow. So Nanny didn't worry about the babies.

The half-grown children had romped and played in the moonlight until they had become so tired that they were glad to curl up in their beds. They were dreaming the pleasantest of Meadow Mouse dreams. So Nanny didn't worry about them. But she did worry about Danny Meadow Mouse. Why didn't he come home? Never since she had known him had Danny been gone so long. Something must have happened to him. She was sure of it.

Had Reddy or Granny Fox caught him? She hadn't seen either of them on the Green Meadows that day, but one of them might have been there long enough to catch Danny without being seen by her. Or perhaps Black Pussy the Cat from Farmer Brown's had surprised Danny. She had seen Redtail the Hawk sailing over the Green Mead- and unharmed in a tree top when might be that he had dined on jump.

Jeanne D'Arc Led the Parade

WHEN on Memorial day the troops marched down Michigan boulevard in Chicago, Jeanne d'Arc proudly led the parade, and was vociferously cheered all along the route. She is a little black French mare, twenty-eight years old, and through the terrible days of Belleau Wood and Vaux, where the German drive on Paris was halted in June, 1918, she carried the major of the Twelfth field artillery, Second division, U. S. A., with never a sign of faltering. Then she went through the sanguinary engagements at Soissons, at Point-a-Mouzon, at St. Mihiel, at Blanc Mont Masif, and in the Meusse-Argonne offensive. She is believed to be the sole survivor of twenty overseas horses which were brought to the United States after the World war. Jeanne is now tenderly cared for in the One Hundred Twenty-second field artillery stables in Chicago.
