And laws to regulate potatoes. We'll plant beans.

A light frost a week ago, not resulting fatally to vegetation. The wet weather keeps the corn green and renews the ranges.

They call themselves democrats. Monarchists is what they are, playing a great game to perpetuate themselves in office.

The Misses Maria and Mildred Saunders, of Washington, D. C., are expected this week end at the home of their parents here for a visit of a few weeks. They are spending a few days at Hastings.

With customary promptness the first section line roads to be cleared of the jungle of weeds are along the James ranch. A half mile of road which was the duty of the writer to have mowed was also included, but it would have been entirely all right here had Jesse sent the mowers clear on through.

The forgotten dust storms brot in some fertilizer and with it a lot of weed seeds. There are bigger and better weeds this year than ever. Rank and tall by the road sides traffic along the way is obscured. It might not be a bad idea to let the weeds stand for a wind break against the November blasts.

Obituary.

Lloyd Richard Kaiser was born in Holt county, Nebraska, September 30, 1904, departed this life August 28, 1935, from monoxide gas poisoning, near the home of his parents east of Swan Lake.

Deceased was the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Kaiser, early settlers of southwest Holt, and a grandson of Charles N. Thompson, age 90, one of the earliest settlers.

On September 3, 1926, he was married to Miss Amy Hamer. One child, a son, was born to them. They, beside his parents, four brothers, Lewis, Vernon, Arthur and Chester, and one sister, Mrs. Helen Whitcomb, all of this community, and many relatives and friends are left to mourn.

When a child he suffered spinal affliction. Some years ago he met with an accident while working around a buzz saw which seemed to aggravate the spinal trouble. He had recently returned from Omaha where he had been for medical examination and had been given no word of encouragement for permanent improvement in his condition.

Funeral services were held last Friday at the Methodist church in Chambers, interment in the cemetery at that place. R. S.

SHIELDS

A shower was tendered in honor of Miss Nellie Cleary and John Turner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Cleary on the evening of Aug. 31.

Miss Nellie, the recipient, is a graduate of the St. Mary's academy of O'Neill, and has been a successful school teacher for several years. She is well known and makes a favorable impression with her many friends, who attended the shower and presented her with many useful and valuable gifts as a token of esteem.

John is a young man who grew up in the northern part of the county, has exemplary habits and a host of friend wherever he goes. He is a good all-round sport that everyone likes.

About 11 o'clock the young couple opened the numerous packages that were stacked on the table, announcing the contributors name, after which John gave a short talk thanking each and every one for their kind remembrance.

A lunch was served immediately afterward which hit the right spot.

After the lunch a mock wedding took place. Alden Grutsch, the Justice of the Peace of Rock Falls presided at the ceremony that sounded more real than bogus.

Levi Yantzi acted as bride, attended by Miss Murray, who carried a bunch of cockleburs. Francis Curran acted as groom and Ed. Turner acted best man.

This was well presented but it looked unnecessary to insist on historical data and looked to comical for a sacred mission.

Next on the program was a waltz played by Albert Roseler, entitled, "You Will Always Be A Sweetheart To Me."

Miss Cleary and Mr. Turner had the floor all to themselves while Ed. Turner's melodious voice accompanied the selection E. E.

THE NEBRASKA SCENE

(Continued from page 1.) when they win an election. He likes politics and is bound to run again for something, but he hates like heck to take another licking. Consequently he is doing some deep studying before committing himself.

Democrats mentioned for the senatorial job include Former Governor Keith Neville, of North Platte, who probably tops the list; Charles W. Bryan, three times governor and defeated for the democratic senatorial nomination in the last primary; Harry B. Coffee, congressman from the fifth district, and J. E. Lawrence, Lincoln newspaper editor, who is said to be assured of Norris' support in case the old veteran decides not to run again.

Incidentally, Terry Carpenter has announced he will run for senator if Norris steps out of the picture.

One thing appears to be certain at the present time—Charles McClelland, of York, will not seek reelection as republican national committeeman for Nebraska. Either McKelvie or Simmons is expected to capture that honor next year.

It is also certain that if McKelvie chooses to run, Simmons will not oppose him, and vice versa. "Sam" and "Bob" as the new deal democrats affectionately call them, could put Siamese twins to shame, politically speaking.

Another interesting issue confronts the voters of the first congressional district. Congressman Luckey doubtlessly intends to run for re-election, but opposition right in his own political family is early shaping itself.

A good man to bet on, the prognosticators say, would be Walter Jurgensen, lieutenant governor. He slipped into public office with the 1933 democratic landslide by a very small majority, but two years later he made the wise boys open their eyes by receiving the greatest number of votes and the largest majority over his opponent of any state officer.

Jurgensen is a man of action rather than words, and he hasn't committed himself as yet. However, he has taken over the newspaper published in College View, suburban Lincoln, pepped it up considerably, renamed it the Nebraska Digest, and has added the title of Publisher and Editor to his name.

Things look suspicious when an allegedly normal man enters the weekly newspaper business these days of his own free will.

Mayor Bryan of Lincoln, is also sized up by many observers as opposition to Luckey. The former governor is "dry-nursing" the supposedly dry first district in a very evident fashion.

Soldier compensation which during the past few years has become one of the country's major political issues, has been interpreted by James L. Brown, Lincoln lawyer, orator and war veteran, in a manner that brings to Nebraska veterans a new perspective on the issue.

"We who wore the uniform of our country are made less impatient by postponment of compensation payment," he declares, "than by the character of some arguments urged against our rights to a bonus. The argument that the country cannot afford to pay it now is sound. The arguments that a soldier who escaped crippling disease or injury should be content with his good fortune, and, that he capitalizes patriotism when he seeks compensation, try the patience sorely. Still, we must be patient. For the republic is not ungrateful; it is a nation distracted."

"We should not forget the country's experience since the war. First an unnatural prosperity brot forth a materialism and self-interest which are exasperated always by claims resting on a basis so intangible as loyalty and gratitude. Second, as startling as a fireball in the night, the waves and tides of taxation and vanishing values seemed suddenly to be washing away the security of materialism. Fear replaced self-interest, and the depression deepened the cloud thru which the public saw the soldier and his sacrifices."

"But those twin imposters, prosperity and depression, will pass. Everything passes. And when they are gone a clearer, finer appreciation of all value will come. The country will remember its warriors as it ever has; with warm appreciation."

"Soldier! the country will remember you as you stood in line and gave a mortgage on your perfect body, on your chance for happiness. It will see you toiling thru mud on long marches under heavy packs. It will glimpse you hungry, cold; and tortured by a haunting fear that never again would you look upon that face you love."

"Just yet, your sacrifice is not clearly discerned. The country still sees as thru a glass, darkly. And so we must be patient as out of the shadow of depression comes the argument, from those who know not what they say, that we would 'capitalize patriotism.' Of them, we can say with Romeo: He jests at scars that never felt a wound."

"The bonus will be paid. In the sincerity of our people we can trust."

It has been definitely learned that the constitutionality of the state bonding act, passed by the 1935 legislature, will be tested in the courts by action brought by bonding companies. Inside information also reveals that a court test of the new law placing a 2 per cent gross tax on premiums of fire insurance companies will be made.

Two main points will be argued in the hearing on the bonding act which gives the state virtually a monopoly on the bonding of state officials and most officials of governmental subdivisions.

First, if a public official is bonded by the state (if the state gives a bond to the state), does that constitute a waiver of the bond?

Second, the Nebraska constitution provides that the credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation. Is that provision violated by the new law?

The tax on fire insurance companies is supposed to be paid to cities and villages to pay relief benefits to members of fire departments, and the insurance companies say it is a plain case of the local governments shoving their rightful duties over on them.

Applications for reimbursement of losses to crops filed with the state hail insurance bureau total approximately $100,000 while there is only $35,000 in the coffers to pay the losses. This means the losses will have to be paid on a fractional pro rata basis.
