Plenty of Pheasants If You Know Where To Go

Montana Jack Sullivan and James F. O'Donnell went out last Sunday and within a brief time killed the limit of pheasants while hundreds of strangers in high powered cars and equipped with fine guns found nothing, or, at most, one or two birds.

"Those fellows who come in here," O'Donnell said, "make a grave mistake in not contacting someone living here, before the season opens. It's like this; Sullivan and myself, as kids, hunted this entire section of country and we know it like a book. We should and do go out and easily get our allotment."

"A stranger races in and spends his time speeding from one cover to another, likely combing those barren of birds and soon it is time for him to go home or to his hotel. If these men only would properly prepare for the season before it opens, connect with a native or two, find the pheasant laden covers, there would be different stories when they go home. As it is, there must have been a great number disappointed."

Sullivan said he and O'Donnell had a great laugh at those in cars, hundreds of them whizzing on every side road in quest of the game birds. One place looked as good as another so they pressed on the gas and were "hunting" pheasants in Holt county.

"The woods, fields and weeds are full of pheasants," Sullivan said, "and the faintest road last Sunday was a race course. There are plenty of birds here but it takes a native to find them. A stranger cannot come in here and in one day raise a family and become an early settler, and he no more can come in and fill his bag with pheasants in one or even several days."

"Another thing we noticed is that vegetation this fall is very rank and a hunter must work hard. We used a dog and found that helped considerably."

"Last fall there were no weeds and it was easy to flush pheasants, easy to shoot them and easy to find dead birds on the ground."

"As far as O'Donnell and I are concerned you may say there are lots of pheasants in this part of Holt county."

Rain Sunday afternoon chattered teeth of hunters but aided those having dogs, making the pheasant scent much easier for the dogs to define.

THE NEBRASKA SCENE

(Continued from page 4.) 000 a year if personal taxes are paid 100 per cent. If tax collections run around 60 per cent as at present, the levy will account for little more than half a million dollars.

Still another proposed law coming under the work-relief category, applies to all cities and villages, allowing them to condemn land necessary for the elimination of grade crossings. It also would give them power to appraise damages and pay them by means of a bond issue, or otherwise, while the state highway department would be authorized to assist municipalities in planning and constructing such works, without or with the aid of the federal government.

An attempt will be made to patch up H. R. 70 and H. R. 90, passed by the last legislature and designed to require all car owners to pay taxes on their vehicles before they can secure licenses, thus stepping up tax collections in the state. The laws are unenforceable at present, the governor says.

Word has come from Washington to the state roads and irrigation department that a field study is to be made in the state by a federal representative, M. C. Swanson of the REA, to determine just how far rural electrification can go in the near future. Applications for $13,229,230 of such projects have been made by groups of Nebraskans.

Creation of a state power authority in Nebraska, patterned after the TVA, and utilizing a gigantic power hookup taking in the Tri-county, Platte and Loup river power projects, envisioned for the Cornhusker state.

Recent development would indicate, however, that this vision will have a few obstacles to overcome before every Nebraska farm becomes a miniature Broadway where bright-lights are concerned.

The federal government is not yet convinced that Nebraska can double its electrical consumption in a year's time, as is contemplated in the applications for rural electrification projects.

The proposed projects that will be studied by the federal representative include:

Southeastern Nebraska power district, Beatrice, $575,000 applied for.

Eastern Nebraska power district, taking in most of the state's southeastern corner, $2,500,000.

Lancaster county power district, $85,012.

Norris power district, Wilber, $1,693,500.

Southern Nebraska power district, Hastings, $7,325,718.

Polk county power district, $250,000.

It is understood at Lincoln that the large projects have little chance of getting government approval at this time, altho the outlook is brighter for smaller projects.

According to the early trend, tax returns in Nebraska will be greater this year than for 1934. Colfax, the first county to make its final complete report to the state tax commissioner, will have a tax yield of $328,614, compared with $320,227 in 1934.

Butler county's total will be $420,717 this year, as against $409,905 levied in 1934. Valley county shows a $285,775 total, or nearly $8,000 more than 1934 despite a drop of about $600,000 in total assessed valuation.

With one rift in the statehouse family (over crop reports) just recently ironed out, W. J. Williams, of Lincoln, one of the special committee investigating the state banking department's receivership division under a special legislative appropriation made available by the last session, has poked up the fire over in another corner of the capitol.

State Auditor Ayres and several other members of the official family have held that the investigation has been little more than a waste of time and money. They want the probe terminated in the near future.

Not so, Mr. Williams, who, incidentally, loses a good job when the investigation quits.

"State officials and employees of the bank receivership division are making attempts to tie my hands and even resort to intimidation to prevent me from pursuing inquiry into the acts of officials and employees of the department," Williams declared in a statement to the press last week.

Williams insists that there are a number of things about the receivership division that need airing, especially as regards the alleged solicitation of political "slush" funds from employes by higher-ups, the employing of relatives, and connections between erstwhile officials and banking institutions.
