Soil Conservation

By F. M. Reece

Representatives of Nebraska farmers and the extension service of the agricultural college are in Chicago this week attending a regional conference of the cornbelt states in connection with the new soil conservation program.

How the conservation program might be put into effect in 1936 on a temporary basis is the immediate question before this group of farmers and officials. The second most important question is how the preliminary program developed for 1936 will fit into a more permanent program to go into effect in 1937 or 1938 if states enact legislation to cooperate with the federal government.

For the past two years Nebraska farmers have favored taking out of production a certain per cent of their land and having one contract instead of two or three on their farm. Just how such an idea might be put into practice in 1936 during the short time which is available between now and planting time will undoubtedly be discussed at Chicago. Indications are that no plan of procedure will be presented by the Washington officials. They will be guided entirely by the consensus of opinion expressed at regional conferences like the Chicago meeting.

The amendments to the soil conservation act make it definite that community and county committees of farmers will be elected in each county by those who participate in the soil conservation program. Experience in the past three years with the Triple A will be used as a guide in setting up and handling the new program.

CONGRESS AS SEEN BY A NEBRASKAN

By Karl Stefan.

While many of the backers of the Frazier-Lempke refinancing bill voted for the soil conservation act, they stated openly that passage of a lower rate of interest measure would do more for permanent recovery for agriculture than any other measure suggested. These representatives were active during the day endeavoring to get more signatures on the discharge petition which still remains at 207. Some of the house leaders say they can get ten more signatures removed from the petition if they get near a majority, and if they really want to. So some of the Frazier-Lemke workers indicated that they will start another petition asking that the rules of the house be changed and reverted back to the old rule of last year when 145 signatures were needed to discharge a committee. It now requires 218 signatures.

Old timers tell the new members that they have never seen the time when major bills were being rushed through both houses as they are now. When the navy bill and the agriculture bill and the tax sales bills are out of the way they figure that both houses will be talking adjournment which they predict will come the latter part of April or the first part of May. President Everson of the National Farmers Union arrived in town and called on the Nebraska delegation. He says that the Nebraska Union has now voted to reaffiliate with the National Union.

With the government renting about 118 buildings in this town, the real estate sharks are getting busy. One graft is for real estate men to lease buildings and then sublet them to the government. They say that they make plenty of money this way. Apparently these sharks have advance information as to just what buildings the government will be needing.

About 100 sheriffs and chiefs of police are in town getting some free instruction on how to detect criminals, from Edgar Hoover and the "G" men. Many congressmen visit this department, now one of the most important in our land. While congressmen were there the other day, a telegram came from Canada with a fingerprint of a man who was captured in Canada following a crime. The congressmen followed this fingerprint through millions of files and in ten minutes the finger print was identified, matched, and a full record of the criminal was telegraphed back. Another case came in at the same time containing a typewritten letter and with aid of chemical experts developed the fingerprint, which was matched, and the arrest of the man was made by telegraph while the congressmen were in the office. Automatic machines were used to hunt out certain fingerprints. It is no guess work with Uncle Sam any more, and criminals have very little chance to beat the law. The department is cooperating with every city, county and state in our country and with the territories and law enforcement officers of other lands.

The coconut oil industry and oleomargarine people are starting a campaign in Washington for the repeal of the excise tax on imported coconut oil, and also against legislation which was planned to increase the tax on oleomargarine. Full pages of advertisements are printed by the national association of margarine manufacturers. These advertisements contain a picture of the dome of the capitol and a picture of a small child with a piece of dry bread in his hands, under which are the words, "Do I have to eat it dry, Mother?" And below that is the picture of a slice of bread with the words—"Don't tax the spread on people's bread." The inference is made from these gigantic advertisements that oleomargarine is healthy, and contains just as much food element as country butter.

The neutrality bill was passed without much opposition in the house although some tried to get some amendments in, only to be voted down. Many opposed the bill because it was put through by a gag rule. But many voted for it because they didn't want to be on record against neutrality.

Every congressman and senator has the privilege of having one copy of any government document bound. A visit to the government printing office would give the taxpayer just a little hint as to where his money goes and why the government printing office has to ask for huge appropriations. That office is always behind, especially in the bindery work, because all members have an unusual number of documents bound in beautiful book bindings. Orders that were given to the government printing office last November have not yet been completed.

Tourists are very much interested in the stories the guides in the capitol tell them about the painting of the murals in the senate wing of this beautiful building. The guides tell them that these murals were painted by an Italian artist named Braumidi, who for many years was the artist in the Vatican in Rome. This artist was almost through with the murals in the senate wing, when he fell from his ladder, and was so badly injured that it was impossible for him to continue and complete his work. Some years later, these murals, which tell a story in themselves of the progress of these United States, were continued by another artist, and when you look up at these paintings, you can easily see the point where the Braumidi must have fallen and the point where this other artist took on the work. There is a very distinguishable difference in the work of these two men.

You may be interested to know that the appropriation bill calls for $879,743,905. It is a very interesting bill in that it shows how much money is needed to run the executive office and the sundry independent offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937. The executive office will get $437,130. This includes the salary for the president which is $75,000 and the salary for the vice president which is $15,000. Other salaries in the office of the president include three secretaries who get $9,500 each a year. There is also an item of $50,350 for stationary, telegrams, telephones, books for the library, furniture, carpets, automobiles, garage expense, labor and special service. There is also an item of $25,000 for traveling and official entertainment of the president. Another item of $143,000 for the care, alteration, refurbishing, lighting, heating of the executive mansion. The executive mansion has to be overhauled frequently and when it is considered as many as 10,000 people go through the building in one day you realize the wear and tear on the floors and the necessity of those repairs.
