STEFAN SEES HOLT HAY

The greater part of the United States where livestock is fed is looking to one county in the Third Nebraska district for its real help this year, according to Congressman Karl Stefan, who has just returned from a visit to at least twelve counties in this district.

"Holt county will feed untold thousands of cattle this year, he says. "The southern part of Holt county, which is the locality of the greatest hay growing section in the world, is today deluged with appeals for hay. Thousands of head of cattle are being shipped there to feed. Hundreds of farmers from drought areas are there buying hay or looking for pasture for starving cattle. Scores of trucks are leaving there daily, loaded with hay and destined to localities where there is no feed.

"Holt county and Rock county hay growers state that they have about one-hundred thousand tons of new hay which can be sold now. Half of last year's crop of hay is also still on hand. In these terrible times the importance of Holt county as the greatest hay growing county in our district comes to the foreground. Holt county becomes the savior of the feed situation. Only a few months ago, hay farmers in Holt county faced a hay surplus. They had half of last year's crop of hay on hand. A fair sized crop of new hay was being harvested. Farmers then offered their hay for $1.25 a ton in the stack. Buyers wouldn't take it at that low price, fearing a tremendous crop of hay elsewhere as the result of the additional grasses and legumes being put into production under the soil conservation program. Then came the drought and farmers faced a feed shortage. No rain fell in July and grass quit growing. Farmers became desperate. Today hay in Holt county is selling from $7.00 to $13.50 a ton. Buyers are plentiful. They come from eastern Nebraska, South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, Wyoming and even other states.

"Holt county rye, of which there was considerable and for which there was little or no market some months ago, will bring revenue to the rye farmers. Some months ago this rye was selling around 33 cents. The elevators in some parts of Holt county are paying 82 cents a bushel for this rye. "If rain comes now there will be just a little late corn in Holt county, but very little. An elevator at Atkinson was quoting Argentine corn delivered from Kansas City at 92½ cents on Monday. "Elsewhere in the Third district there will be no corn. If rains come now, there will be fall pasture and some feed. So far as the feed situation is concerned the Third district will be somewhat better off than in 1934.

"Before the drought and at the time when farmers believed that they were going to have a good crop of hay, the hay farmers in Holt county faced a real problem. With no market for their hay they felt that the soil conservation program would result in great injury for them. They figured if the government was going to take thousands of acres of corn, grain and cotton land out of production and plant that land with such soil building crops as grasses, alfalfa and legumes, this would result in putting into production untold amounts of hay or feed which would replace a market for the prairie hay of Holt county. The Wisconsin farmers appeared before Secretary Wallace with the same argument, only the Wisconsin farmers who are dairy farmers argued that this plan would result in bringing into being untold number of new dairy herds to compete with the Wisconsin milk and butter production. The Wisconsin dairy farmers secured some benefits through the new program and the Nebraska hay farmers of Holt county also requested some benefits through the program. The secretary of agriculture, however, ruled wild hay as a "neutral crop" and not subject to benefits. This left the hay farmers of Nebraska to face the old law of supply and demand. If there was to be a hay crop there would be no demand for their hay. Then came the drought and supplied the demand." The congressman since returning is carrying out his plan to visit every county to transact congressional business. The Third district has twenty-one counties and is the largest district in the state in point of population.

HOW FAR HAVE WE GONE

Americans can not view the tragic events in Europe without wondering how far they have gone along the same road. The nation again recalls the words of Rexford Guy Tugwell, under-secretary of agriculture, who said: "The autocrats must get out of the way with the moral system that supports them. We shall have to recognize our enemies and go forward with closed ranks. It will not be pleasant. These historical changes never are."

RALPH TOMLINSON, Prop.

The Atlantic ocean is not wide enough to conceal from American view the red clouds hovering above the troubled horizons of France and Spain.

Our people instinctively reject the thought that we are capable of abandoning the peaceful pursuit of the ideals that have made us a happy and progressive nation. And yet America must reflect soberly upon the evidence of its own trend toward the disasters that have involved these distressed countries.

How capable are our leaders of foreseeing these dangers, and of forestalling them?

America cannot forget the words of Donald R. Richberg who, as general counsel for the National Recovery Administration, said:

"The long-discussed revolution is actually under way in the United States. It is here."
