Washington, D. C., Jan. 3.—Notwithstanding the fact that it rained all the way from Chicago to this big town—we got here "all right." People on the train who came all the way from California stated that rain and snow had been falling all the way across the country. Newspapers with Nebraska date lines tell of snow six to ten feet deep over the Nebraska third district. That is the greatest farm relief we know of right now.

Washington today looks just as it looked two years ago when the workers from this congressional office first saw the town. The capitol has been repainted. The mall is cleared of trees. The White House has been made almost fireproof. Workmen are busy on a new building for the Bureau of Printing. The temporary grand stand and seats are all ready for the inauguration of the President on Jan. 20. The temporary seating in front of the White House for the reviewing stand for the inauguration parade is also set up. Everything seems to be ready for a great show. Apartments and rooms are hard to get. Everybody seems to be coming to town. The navy midshipmen came off the train by the score. Going back to studies after holidays at home. Six hundred and two thousand people in this town and nearly all of them working for the taxpayers.

The first 1937 Nebraska license tag in Washington appears on a Nebraska Third district automobile. It attracted some attention in front of the house office building. Some congressmen buy District of Columbia auto licenses. They cost only a dollar.

Church crowds here on this Sunday were very small due to the rain and cold winds. Easter brings out the biggest crowds. So does Christmas eve. They tell us it was hard to get a seat in the churches here on Christmas eve. Some pews had to be reserved ahead of time. The picture shows attract vast crowds as usual.

Washington D. C., Jan. 4.—Although congress opens tomorrow—Tuesday noon—this was really the big opening day in congress. The Republicans and Democrats held their caucuses behind closed doors in the House chamber. The minority and majority selected their speakers—their floor leaders—their house employees and chairmen of various committees. While there was a fight among the Democrats over the floor leadership, it was all known ahead of time that William Bankhead would be the Speaker and Bert Snell would be the republican floor leader. The real fight among members of both sides was for places on committees. Members usually go to their floor leaders and chairmen of committee on committees, and fight for places on committees which they hope will do their districts the most good.

This office is making a fight for the agricultural committee, but because there are so few republicans left, it is hard to land such a preferred committee. Chairmen tell members that there are so many deocrats there may be few posts left for a minority member.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 5.—With both parties all lined up with their organization work, the slate was clean today and the speaker was introduced and members were sworn to uphold and protect the constitution of the United States. There was the usual scramble for tickets to the two galleries. People in all walks of life wanted to see the Seventy-Fifth Congress open and "The Hill" police had the usual difficulty in handling the crowd. Admission to both galleries was by ticket only. That did not prevent a lot of people "who knew somebody" getting by the guards and getting aisle standing room. No business except that of swearing in the new members and the usual formalities of presenting the speaker was done on this day. Members on both sides of the aisle appeared profuse in their congratulations to each other, wishing each other a Happy New Year—but as soon as the legislative mill starts grinding the party lines will be drawn and the usual fight begun.

The National Press Club had as guest of honor and speaker, Vice President John Nance Garner, Monday noon. What the Vice President had to say was absolutely "off the record," and newspaper men attending the luncheon were made to understand that the Vice President's remarks could not be printed. Senator Borah also was a speaker at the luncheon. Both Vice President Garner and Senator Borah appeared in excellent health, but here is a tip—people who talked to the Vice President say that he admitted that he was going to retire from politics after his present term of office.

The ground on which the capitol building and office buildings and the Congressional Library are located is called "The Hill," and today "The Hill" is a regular mad house. Old members are bumping new members from offices. More than three hundred members are moving their offices from one place to another, and new members who had no office reserved are having a tough time finding a place to light. The hallways are filled with furniture and employees are dashing madly about to place that furniture where members want it. It will be a month before many of these members are actually settled down and ready for real work.

Miss Galey of Columbus, called at the congressional office recently. She is employed by the Security Board and drives here occasionally from Baltimore where the Security Commission rented a lot of space and where hundreds of people are working. There is not room in the regular governmental buildings in Washington for the unusual number of governmental bureaus. The government rents about 100 buildings in this town. The rental runs over one million dollars per year, but buildings are so scarce that this new Security Board had to be moved to Baltimore in order to get suitable space.

The annual meeting and reception of the General Federation of Women's Clubs will be held here on Jan. 13. The State President and national organizers from all of the states have sent beautiful engraved invitations to the senators and congressmen from their states to attend this reception. The Nebraska members received their invitations from Mrs. Martha Scott and Mrs. Martin McDuffey of Norfolk, State President.

LABOR SHORTAGE SIGHTED
Dr. Harold G. Moulton's prediction that we shall have an actual labor shortage in the United States within the next five years if industry production recovers to the 1929 limit is in line with the general thesis which the Brookings institution, of which he is head, has been so effectively preaching during the last two years. This is, of course, in direct contradiction with the theories of such New Dealers as Harry Hopkins and with the false doctrines of those who advocate the economics of scarcity.

But the country is plainly on the road toward discarding this philosophy of despair and defeatism. It is not likely to listen much longer to the theory that there are no new worlds to conquer. This change means a return to the traditional American optimism and energy which not only brought the nation out of the past depression, but has opened new frontiers as old ones have been closed. But there still remains a serious problem of underconsumption. In other words, we are still consuming less than we need and less than the country can produce. If we can keep prices low and increase production we shall be able to greatly increase consumption.

The most serious danger that lies ahead is that by government interference and by increased taxation prices will be forced up as fast or faster than wage increases. If price increases can be avoided industrial production may well, as Dr. Moulton predicts, surpass the 1929 level within a few years. That this will make possible the virtual elimination of all but the unemployables seems clear to everyone except Harry Hopkins.—New York Herald-Tribune.

CURTAILING PUBLIC WORKS
The progress of recovery has now eliminated further need for expansion of public works or for federal subsidies for construction to states or cities. Private construction, especially of residences, requires skilled labor, which should now be released by curtailment of all but the most urgent public works. A shortage of skilled construction labor is already noted in many parts of the country, a fact which may limit the speed of recovery in private building.

Those are the conclusions of the public works committee of the American Association for Labor Legislation. They are doubly significant because of their source, for the committee has not been opposed to the large public works policy of the past, but, on the contrary, has recommended and warmly approved it, and even now recommends that the PWA be retained as a permanent agency, ready for "the next depression." But for the present, it holds, "the pump has been primed" and "recovery is in full swing."—New York Times.

An ounce of flattery will go farther with most women than a pound of pity.

Tuesday was the anniversary of the great blizzard of January 12, 1888, 49 years ago. The morning of that memorable day was as balmy as it was last Tuesday, clear skies and the sun shining brightly. About 11 o'clock it clouded over and by 11:30 one of the worst storms in the history of this section was raging and kept it up for about 18 hours. The thermometer dropped to the bottom of the gauge and remained there for nearly 48 hours. Many lives were lost in this section and over the western part of the state, and thousands of head of stock perished.
