COURT BILL PREVENTS HOPPER POISON APPROPRIATION
 Farm emergency legislation and other important work which the House members could do now is held up. Everything is held up by the Court squabble. Even pleas for more grasshopper poison meet deaf ears: After hard work the Prairie States group got the House to appropriate an additional million dollars to fight the hoppers but they are told that no business except court business can be discussed in the Senate because of rules adopted by that body. So members who live close to Washington get favorable action and week-end adjournments and go home. Members who live a thousand miles from Washington stick around their offices or committee rooms and complain bitterly because they feel the taxpayers are not getting their money's worth from their representatives. The death of Senator Joe Robinson, majority leader in the Senate, has confused matters even worse.
 Farm members know that it is too late to do anything about grasshoppers in wheat and oats fields. Much of the small grain is cut. But they know the hoppers are sitting on barbed wire fences by the millions waiting for orders to get into the corn. The Bureau of Entomology admits not enough poison had been sent out and intimates that if immediate emergency funds are available some of the corn may be saved. But delay due to this red tape is likely to result in considerable corn damage by hoppers. In the meantime the members are desperately working on various House and Senate leaders and even on the Chief Executive to do something. If the President insists upon the Court bill there will probably be no possibility of the appropriation for poison in time to do any good.
 Senator Norris Recuperating
 Senator Norris of Nebraska will not return to the Senate during the remainder of this session according to information from the capitol physician's office. The senior Nebraska senator experienced an attack of indigestion over a

Members Prostrated by Heat
 Heat prostrations and death from heat continue in Washington. At one time 100 members of the House were absent from the floor. The heat wave caught the people in this town unprepared and there is much suffering. While the House chamber is air cooled, the atmosphere outside is almost unbearable and members are reported on the sick list by the score.

Scouts Had Big Time
 The boys scouts are gone. Thirty thousand of them were here. They got in on at least three days of typical Washington heat. They left behind thousands of dollars worth of the Washington merchants. Every boy had his spending money and the souvenir merchants say they did a bigger business with the scouts than they do with any other convention. The boys on the other hand had a wonderful time and had many lessons in American history. Their stories to folks at home should be interesting. The Nebraska group made a real record especially in the presentation of the "Pioneering," which is done by scouts. Lyman Burkholder, the Nebraska scout leader, was one of the outstanding figures among the scout executives.
Easterner Figures Shrinkage
 Congressman James Wadsworth of New York, used to be a United States senator. He is one of the outstanding members of the House and is quite popular for his fairness in debate. Wadsworth is a 'gentleman' farmer. He is one of the farm-congressmen who believe that it is possible to fatten steers on grass. He came smiling into the House lobby yesterday and told of his success in raising beef cattle. He said he just sold a lot of twelve hundred pound steers for 10 cents a pound. These steers were fed entirely on hay and grass. They sold for a dime a pound on his New York farm. He figures he made about 3 cents a pound shrinkage by selling them right out of the farm yard. Even these eastern congressmen are beginning to realize that the farmer has to pay in transportation costs.
Pension Creates Problems
 Pietro Lombardi, a Spanish-American war veteran who draws fifty dollars a month pension from Uncle Sam, has a problem on his hands. He comes to the congressional office to ask for its solution. Lombardi has a wife in Italy. He has just come back from a visit with her. He brought back his youngest son for whom he secured a good job in the United States. His wife has never lived here. He has two other boys here. One of them is a brick-

WET Heat Is Worse
 Although the thermometer at home has hit around 108 a lot of Nebraska people who live here admit that 108 in Nebraska is not as hot as 95 in Washington. There are about 700 Nebraska people in this town. Most of them work for the government. They admit the "wet" heat of Washington is almost unbearable. Most of them are not used to this kind of humidity and many are planning to go home for their summer vacation. Those working here for the government are not so bad off. The hours are short. They go to work around 9 in the morning and quit around 4 or 4:30 p. m. They have Saturday afternoons and Sundays off and the pay is regular and sure.

Time Talks in Dollars
 Yes, time is money. The time it takes you to earn money is valuable. Your time and your knowledge combine to form your greatest asset.
 The result of your earning time is not wasted when the shopping for your home and family is done from the ads in this newspaper.
 When your dollar comes into a cash drawer of one of our advertisers, a bigger dollar's worth is given to you in exchange. Relatively that makes your pay envelope fatter. Buying the same quality for less money never hurts anybody's feelings.
