AN UNFOUNDED CHARGE

The charge of faithlessness is laid at the door of Senator Burke of Nebraska, and other senators and representatives, because, as candidates, they supported the new deal in the campaigns of 1932 and 1934, yet now refuse to accept the policies and implications of "the second new deal."

It is a serious charge, and deserves careful consideration.

We made a convincing answer was made to it in Chicago the other day by General Hugh Johnson, who was himself one of the most ardent and powerful of the early new dealers. He said:

"I was present at the birth of the new deal in 1932. I knew it as well as any. But through the whole discussion I never heard of an attempt to change the organization of the courts to make them subservient to the executive.

"I never heard of any plan to reorganize the government—not for economy, but to centralize all power and planning in the executive.

"I never heard of any proposal to remove power from the states and put them—not in a federal government, but in a federal governor; nor to use taxing power—not to support the government but to redistribute the wealth of the country.

"I never heard of any suggestion to appropriate the revenues of the United States in a lump sum for the executive to distribute among certain classes of people at his own discretion.

"I never heard of a proposal to take from congress the power to regulate the value of money and give it to the executive.

"Nobody mentioned in my hearing a proposal to cut the United States into seven economic provinces for development purposes and to put the control of that development in the executive department instead of the states or congress."

This by no means exhausts the list. There is the power over peace or war, the power of the purse, the power to send prices and stocks up or down, the unlimited discretion over billions of appropriations, the power to shift appropriations from one purpose to another—all tending to "a complete remaking of the government of the United States."

The Age of "Less"

This is a topsy-turvy world, what with fireless cookers, wireless telegrams, horseless carriages, seedless grapes and spineless cactus.

There is more of "less" every day. Today it is smokeless powder; tomorrow it may be headless cabbage or costless merchandise.

And speaking of merchandise remember that the goods you buy from advertisements in this newspaper actually cost less for the same high quality. That's one reason why people read our ads so carefully, why they do their family shopping through the family newspaper. Also, that's why this isn't an adless paper!

THE NEBRASKA SCENE

By the Lowell Service

The legislative council, created as an interim advisor to the unicameral, has failed to take the initiative in the matter of planning and advising.

At the preliminary session the division between liberal and conservative cropped out. It was impossible to agree on a director. Clerk Hugo Srb was selected as temporary director. The council listed a number of angles of the taxation problem for discussion and discussed some problems of state government. All the angles have been emphasized before; all the problems have been wrangled over for years in almost the same language.

So the taxpayers are just out a trifling sum for expenses. In the shop worn language of the bicameral days, the council reports progress and asks leave to sit again.

The news of the New York Mayoralty election produced a noticeable effect on conservative republicans in Nebraska. The close affiliation of Senators Copeland and Burke has been a matter of comment. So the election returns were closely scanned by some astute republican statesmen. There is now a tendency, declare GOP wheelhorses, to let the democrats fight their own battles.

Senator Burke's organizers, and he has a formidable machine, were somewhat dismayed by the vote getting ability of the pro-New Dealers in New York City. With the anti-Roosevelt men bogged down in conservative Gotham and with Tammany in the clutches of Jim Farley there is little hope of successful rebellion along the Atlantic seaboard, Burkeites admit.

The forces of the President's supporters may be divided. Editor James E. Lawrence and Legislator John N. Norton are popular at the White House; both are friends of Senator Norris; both have stood for New Deal principles, Lawrence in the editorial columns and on the lecture platform, Norton on the stump and in the councils of the party at Washington.

Governor Cochran has support of the entire New Deal program. He is on friendly terms with the administration. However, he is not favored among the followers of Norris. During the last two months Terry Carpenter has betrayed signs of a Cochran alignment. In political circles the story has been circulating that Cochran and Mayor Butler are at least political allies.

When Mace R. Brown, at the anniversary celebration of the Omaha Central Labor union, proclaimed Governor Cochran as labor's choice for a third term for governor, he either opened a campaign or spilled the beans.

The governor was at the banquet board as was Governor Phil LaFollette of Wisconsin. The latter advocated the entire reconstruction of both the major parties. In the transformation, he asserted the people would gain a genuine liberal party and a true blue conservative organization.

"Then," he declared, "Conservatives will not run as liberal and then turn conservatives as soon as the election is over."

Democrats admit that the situation is puzzling. Many of Cochran's friends are against a third term campaign for governor. Then, too, Former Governor Bryan is at work. He will naturally, his friends claim, make inroads into Cochran's support. The exemption of homesteads from taxation will be the Bryan slogan along with the reduction of taxes and an increase in old age pensions.

In the meantime a new and distinctly popular name has been added to the republican list of gubernatorial possibilities, Earl M. Cline, former regent, legionnaire, and Lincoln attorney, has been suggested as the republican nominee. The fact that Mr. Cline's candidacy was first intimated in the Lincoln Star may have some significance. It may be that the friends of the state university are inclined to take an interest in the fracas of 1938. Cochran opposed the mill levy during the last legislative session.

"A virtual war is going on between indigent persons and county officials," declared Earl Carpenter of Guide Rock, a member of the unicameral legislature representing Nuckolls, Webster and Franklin counties, who recently visited the state capitol, accompanied by Emil Brodecky of Howells, another legislator. Neither of these men advocated a special session of the legislature, but Carpenter urged that the gasoline tax money held in litigation for two years be used for relief work. Brodecky advised WPA work and RA loans for farmers hard hit by drought.

The board of regents of the University of Nebraska has announced the appointment of 28 new faculty members. Among them are Dr. C. G. Lowe, professor and chairman of the department of the classics, a post which he held from 1927 to 1931. For the last six years Dr. Lowe has been director of the Genadium library of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, Greece. Dr. Ernest G. Witte is the new director of the graduate school of social work and professor of social economy. Lloyd J. Marti becomes a lecturer in Nebraska practice, college of law, and Clementine Newman is the new social director of Carrie Belle Raymond hall.

The federal district court has taken under advisement the suit, heard all day Saturday, of the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers asking injunction against enforcement of the Nebraska State law regulating collection of royalties within the state on copyrighted music. With-in tend days the attorneys must file briefs. Federal Judges Munger and Donohoe and Circuit Judge A. K. Gardner sat on the case, and the society was represented by the following attorneys: Herman Finklestine and Louis Froelich of New York and Louis T. TePoel of Omaha. Assistant Attorney General Barlow Nye and William J. Hotz as special counsel represented the state.

A statement filed by Douglas County Attorney Tom English in the test case filed in the Supreme court by Harry A. Turkey of Omaha declares that the delinquent tax law passed by the unicameral legislature is "incomplete, ambiguous, indefinite, uncertain, and impossible of enforcement." The high court is asked to rule on the validity of the law.

The automobile brake testing equipment on display at the state fair has temporarily been installed back of the Lincoln police station, where it is being used by the police, and in giving demonstrations for the benefit of car dealers and operators.

Edward I. Boisseree of Spalding joined the motor carrier examiner staff of the state railway commission last week. B. L. Knudsen, director of motor transportation has announced that trucker's hearings will be held in the county seat towns of the following counties during the week of Oct. 4: Burt, Cuming, Banner, Dodge, Garfield, Kimball, Loup, Morrill, Scottsbluff, Sherman, Stanton, and Washington.

Secretary Perry Reed of the state fair board says the state fair at least broke even, and may have something to start work with next year. Paid admissions totaled 77,489, which is 6,623 less than last year—probably due to the infantile paralysis epidemic.

M. F. Kracher, state chief probation officer, says that the new state law, LB 267, provides the first adequate check-up that has ever been obtainable on paroled Nebraskans in other states and on out-of-state paroles in Nebraska. Violators of parole, too, can be returned more swiftly and at less cost. Accredited officers of a sending state may always enter a receiving state and apprehend or retake any person on probation or parole.

THE MILLS OF THE GODS

Sometimes the mills of the gods grind slowly, as the old saying puts it, and there may be an example in a resolution which Senator Rush Holt, of West Virginia, says that he is preparing to introduce into our upper house national legislative body, Senator Holt is one of those "recalcitrant" statesmen who voted against the administration's court packing plan. It is said that certain leaders in the New Deal are out to "get" him when the opportunity afforded. Senator Holt, however, is not one of those lamb-like persons who sits down and awaits slaughter. He believes that the best sort of an offense is an attack.

Therefore, the West Virginia statesman plans to introduce a resolution declaring it to be the judgment of the Senate that no president ought to have a third term. There doesn't seem to be anything surprising in this. Some of Mr. Roosevelt's friends have declared that they know he doesn't want a third term. But there are many political experts who believe that whether he wants it or not—and maybe he does—the president will have to seek election again because there is no other leader popular enough with the masses to carry on some of the now several unpopular phases of the New Deal. Rumor has it at Washington that President Roosevelt has selected Senator LaFollette, the militant Wisconsin Progressive, as the fair-haired, dark-haired boy to be his successor. But there are many who believe that Senator LaFollette would not be popular with millions of democrats and the belief is therefore expressed that Mr. Roosevelt himself will have to "come again."

Here is where Senator Holt's resolution comes in. No matter whether or not the President has any intention of running again, the resolution is bound to be embarrassing and may force a declaration from Mr. Roosevelt at a time when no declaration seems to be politic.

The resolution may be embarrassing to some New Deal senators. For nine years ago a resolution was introduced in the Senate against the third term proposition, at a time when the democratic hosts had an idea that the very popular President Coolidge might seek another term. At that time nearly twenty senators still in office voted in favor of a ban on third terms, which was adopted. It was declared that the third term idea was "unwise, unpatriotic and fraught with danger to our institutions."

Of course, some of the senators like Mr. Borah who voted for the anti-third term resolution nine years ago, will consistently vote for the same kind of a resolution now. But among those who voted for the resolution against third term idea as dangerous and unwise, back in Coolidge's day, were Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, the present majority leader; Senator Ashurst, Senator Thomas of Oklahoma and Senator Wagner, all champions of the New Deal, while the anti-third term resolution at that time was introduced by Senator LaFollette in person.

That is why the anti-third term resolution may come up now to plague a lot of folks if it is permitted to come to a vote. Probably the New Deal senators will try to talk it to death. You can't blame 'em.
