To Investigate Subversive Movements

Are there subversive movements in the United States today which would result in the overthrow of our republican form of government? The house evidently thinks there is and the other day it passed a bill to investigate all subversive movements including communism, nazism, facism and all kinds of "isms." There have been many resolutions of this nature introduced in the house in recent months. There have been several investigations. Only recently the Bureau of Investigation after an investigation submitted a report. But after months of charges and counter-charges against aliens of all kinds the house passed the bill to allow another investigation. Charges of "another fishing trip" and wasteful expenditure of money were made against such another investigation. No one will know just what the investigation will cost or how far reaching it will be. Just what the committee will investigate along with foreign propaganda and the various "isms" in our country is not known. The bill is very broad and gives the committee power of subpoena and power to travel most any place in the land. Those who are likely to be members of the committee have told their colleagues that they will do everything in their power to eliminate any danger of inflaming one class of our citizens against any other class. They have assured members that they will merely investigate charges that there is some movement in our land either communistic or otherwise, which has as its purpose to overthrow our form of government. They feel that putting alleged subversive movements into the limelight may result in extinguishing any seriousness of such movements.

Many members feel that this investigation should be broad enough to take in all kinds of subversive propaganda whether it be British, Spanish, German, Italian, Japanese, Chinese or Jewish. Members whose desks are loaded each day with propaganda of all sorts feel the investigation should be one which will breed Americanism only and not result in inflaming hatred against any of the many great races which make up our great republic.

What Happened To Rug Business? Seven million bales of cotton owned by the government is a lot of cotton according to chemurgic experts who have been in Washington several days talking about how the unemployment problem can be solved. These chemists say the surplus cotton question was on its way to solution until something happened in our foreign trade relations. They say that some American made a machine which made cotton into imitation oriental rugs which are so fine they could hardly be told from the genuine article. Factories were built and a lot of these American carpets started coming into the market. They charge that the duty on this kind of product was lowered with the result that the American mills closed up and the foreign cotton carpet has the American market and the American government holds its cotton.
