THE NEBRASKA SCENE

from the Fifth district. Judges Broady and Polk of the Lancaster county district court held that Heaton's term as county attorney expired before the term of congressman began.

The protest against Mabel Gillespie, WPA worker and director in the Eastern Nebraska Public Power district, was overruled because the court held that the directorship was not an elective office. Mrs. Gillespie's name was ordered on the ballot as democratic candidate for congress in the Second district.

The judges ruled the name of Walter Jurgensen off the ballot as a democratic candidate for lieutenant governor. It was decreed that Jurgensen, convicted on an embezzlement charge, "is not a qualified elector. He is not qualified to hold office, and he is therefore ineligible to become a candidate."

"Shrunken school budgets have resulted in teachers unable to grow culturally, as they should to guide and inspire their students properly; in a failure to supply educational material; and in the elimination of courses of study vitally essential for adequate training," declared C. Ray Gats, superintendent of the Grand Island schools, when addressing a civic club there last week. "Nebraska is keeping a balanced budget only at the expense of its public school children."

A high-powered outboard motor was an unusual article of equipment upon which State Purchasing Agent J.R. Ferris received bids last week. The state game, forestation and parks commission had requested its purchase, according to Secretary Frank B. O'Connell, to be used on a patrol boat on the Missouri river. The boat is used in recovering the many fish that floods have left in lagoons and bayous, and placing them in state streams and lakes. The boat is also useful in law enforcement work, in checking up on commercial fishermen.

Nebraska's quarterly allotment of $783,754 in federal funds to be used in the state assistance program has been approved by the social security board at Washington, according to information received by Director Neil C. Vandemoer. This allotment is apportioned into $642,857 for old-age assistance; $123,877 for aid to dependent children; and $17,030 for the blind. The delay over the approval of the allotment was because of a technicality in regard to $689 for matching funds for the blind, and this matter has not yet been decided by the board. Attorney General Hunter has sent an explanation to Washington as to the way funds for the blind are raised in Nebraska counties.

The state liquor commission has taken under advisement the Dixon case, the first one it has had to decide which involved the cancellation of a carriers' license. Lloyd Dixon, operator of a number of trucks from Fairmont, was cited on a charge of aiding and abetting in violation of the state liquor law. His attorney, Richard Johnson, has questioned the power of the commission to revoke the license and bond of a bonded carrier, claiming that violation of the liquor law is a matter for the courts rather than for the commission, which is an administrative, not a judicial body.

The acrimonious discussion between Attorney General Hunter and the proponents of the proposed amendment to legalize slot machines is another phase of the constitutional jangle that has rocked the state house. The vacancy declared in the office of lieutenant governor and the candidacy of Nate Parsons to gain the short term naturally leads in importance. The slot machine men employed George R. Mann, adviser for the legislative reference bureau, to draw the measure legalizing the licensing system. The proposition appears as a gracious nod to the old age pension advocates, and the implication is that schools and the aged will reap the benefits. The law provides that a summary of the purpose of initiated measures shall appear on the ballot. Mr. Mann decked his statement in honeyed phrases.

Attorney General Hunter looked at the question from a different angle. He asserts that the plan is definitely one to legalize gambling. The proposal outlined by his staff reads:

"A proposal to amend Section 24, Article 3 of the Constitution of Nebraska: To provide for the licensing and legalizing of slot machines and other similar gambling devices; to provide that a part of the revenue derived from such licenses shall go into the state assistance, and a part shall be paid to the school district in which such machine is located; and to provide that no city or village shall levy an occupation tax of more than ten dollars per annum upon any owner or operator of such machines."

Attorney Mann protested. He insisted on more decorous phrases and threatened action in the courts.
