

SOUTHEASTERN BREEZES

By Romaine Saunders

For Sale—A heavy, warm overcoat, just purchased this fall.

Short phrases are coined, survive for a time and pass out of use. "Merry Christmas" lives on, and to attempt to change it would be like trying to improve the Lord's prayer.

I have not noticed where the supervisors filled the assessor's vacancy as yet. Maybe they intend handing it as a Christmas present to some one of the applicants. Why not the other candidate at the last election?

"And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs. . . they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." Millions of mankind uniformed, armed and converted into a diabolical machine to slay and destroy, great vessels, cargo and crew buried miles beneath ocean wave, devastated regions and ruined homes—these, in the face of a universal plea for peace, all testify that the devils are let loose.

The hens have concluded that December has traded with May and are laying eggs by the carload; the sale price at Lincoln's stores having dropped from 28c to 17c.

Time writes no wrinkles on the ocean's azure brow, but a heavy hand is laid on neighbors and friends of our earlier years. The death of Mrs. Meredith removes from the neighborhood in O'Neill in which she resided for over a half century, the last survivor except one family, of the few who pitched their tents on the west side of town in the 80's. When we established a home in that neighborhood there were the Merediths, Smoots, Baldwins, Selkirks, Moores, Corbetts, Evereds and Harnishes. Mr. and Mrs. Harnish and daughter, Ruth, are the only ones remaining. Some moved elsewhere, others were laid in the cemeteries on the hill. I don't know that Mrs. Meredith ever had an unkind word to say of a neighbor or that a neighbor ever had occasion to speak an unkind word of her.

An old man, an old woman, she clinging affectionately to an aged but still sturdy masculine arm, pass up O street frequently these mild December evenings—just "out for a walk." A friend who knows them tells me he is 80, she 70 odd, were recently married, and are the happiest couple in Lincoln. And they are no slouches to look at. Romance may perish from the earth for all youth cares, but the old timers think maybe that is one item of civilization worth saving.

Nebraskans have not been given to claiming super this and super that, biggest and best, and so on, but feel it's a sensible place for sensible people who find other things in life than chasing down the last dollar. And maybe a lot of us are surprised to learn that the largest skeleton of an extinct species of animals ever found was unearthed in Lincoln county.

FORMER FRONTIER EDITOR AND MAYOR OF O'NEILL PASSES AWAY WEDNESDAY

Clyde King, For Many Years One of the County's Prominent Men, Passes Away After a Short Illness At An Omaha Hospital

Citizens of this city were shocked shortly after noon yesterday when word was received from Omaha that Clyde King had passed away in St. Joseph's hospital in that city about 12 o'clock. The Biglin ambulance went to Omaha after the body shortly after noon and it was brought back to this city last night. The funeral will be held from the home, on east Douglas street tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock and will be in charge of the Masonic lodge of this city, of which the deceased was a member.

Clyde N. King was born in Chesterhill, Ohio, on December 4, 1869 and was 70 years and 20 days old at the time of his death. His family came to Nebraska a few years after his birth and settled at Bennett, Lancaster county, Nebraska, where they lived until 1879, when they came to Holt county and settled at Ewing. When living in Ewing Clyde learned the printing business in the office of the Ewing Item, starting in the office shortly after the establishment of the paper in 1884. About 1886 the family moved to this city and Clyde entered the employ of Doc Mathews, who was then publishing the Free Press. After the discontinuance of the Free Press he entered the employ of the Frontier.

In January, 1891, in company with the writer he leased the Item, which had been moved from Ewing to O'Neill by Clarence Selah. This was Clyde's first entrance into business. This paper was conducted for one year when Doc Mathews purchased the Frontier and The Item and Clyde and the writer with Doc Mathews organized The Frontier Printing Company. Doc retired in a couple of years and Clyde and the writer operated the paper until the fall of 1896 when Clyde retired, the writer purchasing his interest in the plant.

In the fall of 1898 he went to Moline, Illinois, where he was superintendent of the Moline Plow Company's printing plant, where he remained for about twelve years, returning to O'Neill in the fall of 1911 and purchasing the Galena Lumber Co. here, which he operated successfully ever since.

On February 4, 1904, he was united in marriage to Miss Mattie Mann at Chicago, Ill. Two children were born to this union, Mrs.

O'Neill Native Still Rises In Her Chosen Profession

Miss Mona Melvin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Melvin, of this city, who has been in St. Louis for the past four or five years, studying dress designing, and who has achieved considerable success in her chosen work, has risen another notch in her profession as evidenced by the following notice which was taken from a story, "St. Louis' Designing Women," and which appeared in the St. Louis Post Dispatch for Monday, December 4th, 1939.

"If a dress makes a hit, there are possibilities of bonuses. One novice, Mona Melvin, designed a little number that sold 27,000 which is a lot of dresses. Her stock went up until employers were competing for her service. She has left St. Louis for even greater pastures." (St. Louis being known as the outstanding junior dress market in the United States, the above really means something.)

Miss Melvin left St. Louis for Dallas, Texas, where she will work for a short time, but believing that the opportunities offered in St. Louis were much greater, and having a very attractive offer from a large dress concern there, she resigned her position in Dallas, and returned to St. Louis. She is expected to arrive in O'Neill on Saturday or Sunday to spend Christmas with her parents in this city.

George Stannard, of San Diego, California, and Arthur King of this city. He is also survived by one brother, Rafe King, of Port Angeles, Wash., and one sister, Mrs. Nettie Shore, of Forks, Wash., who are left to mourn the passing of a kind and affectionate father and brother. Mrs. King died in December, 1930.

Clyde King was a pleasant and agreeable man, with a lot more than average ability. As editor of The Frontier he gained quite a reputation over the state for his trite and trenchant editorials and refused positions on the editorial staff of two of Omaha's large daily papers. After his removal to Illinois he made quite a reputation with his company for the able manner in which he handled their printing department. But he wished to get into business for himself and came back to O'Neill, where he had first entered business and purchased a lumber yard.

During his residence here he took an active interest in the business and social life of the city and served as a member of the city council from the First Ward for several years and served one term as mayor of the city, from May 1, 1919. He refused to be a candidate for re-election.

Clyde appeared to be in the best of health, but the last three months he seemed to be losing weight and on December 4 he went to Omaha for a medical check up. They found on examination that he was suffering from a malignant ailment, with little hopes of recovery. While his condition was serious it was not thought that he would pass away as quickly as he did. He took a turn for the worse Wednesday morning and his folks here were called and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur King left at 6:30 that morning for Omaha, but Mr. King had passed away when they reached Omaha.

In the death of the former editor of The Frontier, as well as a former business partner, we feel that we have suffered a distinct loss and that the people of this county have lost one of their most prominent and substantial citizens. The Frontier force joins the many friends of the family in this city and county in extending them their heartfelt sympathy in their hour of sorrow.
