Death has hit the house a severe blow since the close of the special session. Six deaths have occurred, including that of Congressman Geo. Heinke of Nebraska City.

Mr. Heinke died following an automobile accident in Arkansas. He was driving to Washington to be present at the opening of this session when the accident occurred. Speaker Bankhead appointed Congressman Curtis McLaughlin and Stefan of Nebraska and Gwynne of Iowa to represent the house at the funeral services. Mr. Heinke served with distinction during the first session of the 76th congress and was unusually active on the committee on Labor. During his short service he made many friends in the house.

CONGRESS
AS BEEN BY
KARL STEFAN

ON OPENING OF CONGRESS

The last session of the 76th congress opened with crowds of people waiting outside the capitol trying to get in to hear the opening gavel and also to hear the president deliver his message. There was an additional number of Metropolitan police in and around the building. Every precaution was taken by the police and Col. Starling's secret service police to guard the president and his family.

Mrs. Roosevelt had a granddaughter on her knee while she listened to her husband speak to the house and senate members. The people in the crowded galleries joined in the applause given to Vice President Garner when he entered the chamber with the senate members.

Following the president's address members discuss various points of the speech. Special stress in these conversations was regarding "how far can the United States go into helping European governments becoming as democratic as the democracy of the United States?"

Beilieve it or not, the president's health appears excellent. Far better than a year ago when he opened the 76th congress. His smile came as frequently and his gestures toward the minority side of the chamber had a lot of punch and humor. His reference taxes to pay for more spending money caused plenty of frowns among both the republicans and democrats.

Former members didn't like his reference to reciprocal trade agreements. This question will bring many fights in this session.

Unless the prairie states members are guaranteed that reciprocal trade agreements with South American countries will not work a detriment to American farmers, the entire committee may vote against the extensions of these agreements. Industrial and factory district members, both republicans and democrats seem to favor the extension of these agreements. They say it will mean they can sell more automobiles, tractors and machinery.

Hard Work For Appropriation Committee

Appropriation committees have been working since December 4. They will be the committees which will carry on while the house does general debating. The budget director talked to ranking members for two hours before the new session opened. He showed figures somewhat lower in many cases than a year ago. But the money to run the government in 1941 will climb far into the billions. Just where to cut and what to cut out are questions facing these appropriation committees. Hints of cuts in relief funds and road funds have started quite a stir among members who want to continue federal road work and also continue relief appropriations.

House Represented at Heinke Funeral

Death has hit the house a severe blow since the close of the special session. Six deaths have occurred, including that of Congressman Geo. Heinke of Nebraska City.

Whole Country Icy

The snow and ice is general from Nebraska to Washington. The Third district member made the trip by automobile, but most of the highways were passable providing care is exercised. Many automobiles were found in ditches along the way. Highway patrolmen all along the route were rendering valuable service. In many places cinders are being used on all icy curves especially in the mountains where the use of cinders has eliminated a large number of car accidents.
