Frank H. Griffith

Not "What was his church, nor what was his creed?"
But, "Had he befriended those really in need?"
Not, "How did he die, but how did he live?"
Not, "What did he gain, but what did he give?"

To his children he gave the richest heritage that a father can bequeath—a character of sterling worth. Their memories will be filled with pride, pride in a father whose word was truth; whose honor and integrity men did not question. He gave them ideals and standards by which to live and die. To them he taught the lesson that "The best have no price; they can be bought neither with hope of reward nor fear of punishment; purchased neither with money, nor place, nor with pleasure." He taught them to love life; to love books; to love truth; to think and act independently. Surely theirs is a rich heritage!

To his community he gave that which makes for the highest type of citizenship. He worked for better schools, better homes, and a better community. He was fair in dealing with his fellowmen. He was a dreamer and yet a builder for a better future. Throughout his life he read much, and his interests were far reaching. There was never a time when he was familiar with only local affairs. State, national and world interests all came within the range of his thinking.

His influence and personality will never die.

"All things this testimony give,
We live to die, we die to live;
The tears we shed are not in vain,
From grief our loveliest memories grow."

While the house members are fencing on the floor, committees are beginning to get organized. Several of the sub-committees on appropriations will start work within a week. Several others will be sent out on investigation trips preliminary to holding hearings on appropriations for certain departments. Some of the other investigating committees which have been working in the field during the past few months are to hold hearings here early in December. One of these is the committee on migration and destitute citizens which held hearings in Nebraska and other states. Budgets for some of the big departments are about ready and figures indicate increased demands for the next fiscal year.
