The Pacific Northwest is booming as a result of our national defense program. Vancouver, Wash.,

is especially booming due to the completion of the first unit of a new plant of the American Aluminum corporation which is already turning out large quantities of aluminum. Five additional units are to be constructed and about 700 men are to be employed. When completed, the Vancouver plant will be next largest to the one in the Tennessee Valley which is said to be the largest in the United States. These plants are regarded as national defense plants and a strict regulation has been inaugurated against visitors in order to eliminate danger of sabotage. Much of the aluminum is going into the manufacture of airplanes.

Believe it or not, we have about ten years of raw ore on and under the ground for the manufacture of aluminum and there is no danger of any shortage of this material at the present time. Gigantic electric power supply is necessary for the making of aluminum and locations of plants to available electric power supply is necessary for the making of aluminum and locations of plants to available electric power is the first consideration. Bonneville power supplies the Vancouver plant.

British ship experts are on the can built merchant ships. One expert says Great Britain wants us to build them sixty of these ships. Submarines have sunk too many of the vessels which must be replaced if a steady supply of material is to go to England. Vancouver and Portland are competing for a ship yards to supply some of these vessels. During the last war Vancouver had a ship yard for that purpose and is offering some free sites to this and other industry which is being attracted to points of water transportation and cheaper and abundant electric power.
