National Affairs

By Frank P. Litschert With all the debate and excitement about the lease-lend bill at the National Capitol, and with many people adopting the fatalistic attitude that we are slipping into the war and will go "in" officially during the historically significant month of April, one might fairly believe that politics have been adjourned.

While it is true that there is no partisan feeling in the all-out aid to Great Britain bill and that there are honest Republicans and Democrats on both sides of the measure, it must be remembered that this is a republic and our nation could not exist as it has lived for more than a century and a half without political parties, with full and free opportunity to present their views to the people.

The war crisis will not last forever, and when it subsides we will have politics galore again. To see that this is probable one has only to recall what happened in the campaigns of 1918 and 1920 after the critical days of 1917. The politicians themselves have not forgotten this. The Democratic Committee has moved to larger and more sumptuous quarters in the aristocratic Mayflower hotel in the nation's capital. And the Republican Congressional Committee, which has charge—or should have charge—of the election and reelection of Republican congressmen the country over, has organized, with the 1942 campaign in view. It must be recalled, in this respect, that in another twelve months the campaign for Congressional nominations will be on.

The Republican Congressional Committees met in Washington recently and reelected Congressman J. William Ditter as its chairman. The other officials were retained too. Representative Clifford R. Hope of Kansas, will continue as Secretary of the committee and Robert V. Fleming, of Washington, treasurer. The following four vice chairmen were unanimously chosen: Albert E. Carter, of California; Everett M. Dirksen, of Illinois; John M. Robison, of Kentucky; and Richard B. Wigglesworth, of Massachusetts. Congressman Ditter was a very satisfactory and able chairman of the committee in the 1940 campaign. In spite of the Roosevelt sweep which gave the Republican Presidential candidate but ten states, the Republicans came through with a loss of but seven congressmen. These losses were incurred in a few metropolitan districts where President Roosevelt was especially strong, and pulled over the entire Democratic ticket.

The committee acted with great wisdom when it reelected, for the eleventh consecutive term, Earl Venable, of Idaho, as executive secretary of the committee. Mr. Venable, who came to Washington as the young secretary of the late Senator William E. Borah, has acted as executive secretary of the committee for twenty years. He is pleasant, active, but above all sage and well trained in the ways of politics. He is universally popular with the Republican congressmen and G. O. P. politicians in general who are personally acquainted with him and realize the value of his services.

The leaders of the G. O. P. are said to realize that since the election next year will be a congressional affair, the leadership in the campaign should be turned over, in a large measure, to the Congressional committee, and it is reported that this action will be taken. This is a wise move and one which will bring its reward. It is too early, of course, to predict the outcome of the Congressional election next year since anything can happen in the meantime. But the Republicans are making a good start.

Happy Hour Club

The January meeting of our club was held at the home of Mrs. D. L. Moler, January 27. Roll call was answered by an unfortunate event or discovery within the past year.

The lesson, "Conserving Energy," was presented by our leaders, Mrs. John Grutsch and Mrs. D. L. Moler, all members taking part in the discussion of the different topics.

The leaders also gave extension circulars, "Handy Mechanical Hints for the Home," and "Farm Building Repair," to all members, which we will all find very helpful and useful in our homes and in repairing of our farm buildings.

There were several guests present. A delicious lunch was served by our hostess, Mrs. D. L. Moler. Our next meeting will be with Mrs. John Grutsch on February 20.

Large Crowd of Buyers Attend Auction Monday

The local sales pavilion was crowded to capacity last Monday where a special horse and mule auction was held in conjunction with the regular hog and cattle sale. Many interested buyers were here from several states and there was brisk action in all divisions.

The horse sale began shortly after 11:00 A. M. More than 150 head of horses and mules were sold. Good harness marked animals were in good demand and commanded very favorable prices.

Cattle receipts were heavier than a week ago. Prices were slightly lower on practically all classes, though the good quality, lightweights suffered very little. Prices on these were mostly steady. Cows fell off considerably—the decline being fully 50c lower than prices paid here a week ago.

Hog receipts were not quite so heavy as a week ago. Extreme top on butchers was $7.60 with a practical top of $7.55. Pigs reached an extreme high of $10.00. The next regular sale will be held on Monday, February 3.

Will Advertise Nebraska Choice Corned Steaks

A little red, white and blue cardboard flag will identify Nebraska-raised beef when served in hotel dining rooms and restaurants of the state, according to plans of the Nebraska Advertising Commission announced this week. These flags, which read, "A Choice Cut from Corn Fed Nebraska Beef," are being distributed by the Commission as another step in its program to boost Nebraska industries and bring greater prosperity to Nebraska communities. All hotels and restaurants are being urged to place a flag on each steak or other choice cut of beef served. Distribution is also being made to railroads operating dining cars in and out of Nebraska, and other hotels and leading restaurants in states where Nebraska beef is served.

Miss Mary Harty returned on Saturday from Chicago, Ill., where she has been visiting relatives and friends.

What Are Our War Aims Concerning Russia

Before the United States gets much farther into this war there is one question which we wish our British allies would clear up.

Let's assume that with our assistance the British eventually win a decisive victory. Let's picture Germany blasted by bombers, battleships, blockade, and peace conferees into impotence, and perhaps carved up into a half dozen puny states—France restored—Czecho-Slovakia and Austria resurrected—German occupied Poland independent again, and likewise Belgium, Denmark, Holland, Norway and Rumania.

If Britain is to win such a victory it looks as if American man power will be indispensable, for all the current promises of our leaders not to send another A. E. F. abroad.

If Britain and ourselves win the decisive victory pictured above, Russia will be the strongest nation in Europe.

Germany, exhausted and cut up, will not be the bulwark against Bolshevism that Hitler advertised it as being up to the time he signed the treaty with Stalin. The other European nations will be broke, shot up, hungry, war weary. In such a situation, Russia's Communist leaders will be less than human if they don't set forth to humanize the rest of Europe.

The more idealistic communists think they have a holy mission to communize the whole world. The more earthy among them have the normal lurch for other people's goods and lands and women. So neither element in the Russian Communist party has any scruples against grabbing other people's lands, etc., when the grabbing is good or they think it is good. Witness Finland, East Poland, Bessarabia, Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania.

Well, the question we'd like to have cleared up is this: If Britain wins the war with our help, and so prostrates Europe as to make it an easy prey for the Russian reds, does Britain expect to protect Europe from the reds?

Meaning does Britain propose to fight another war against Russia after Germany has been conquered and Europe "liberated" by British arms? Meaning, of course, shall we be expected to join in that war, too, either by sending guns, tanks, planes and ships, or by going the whole hog and sending men, too?—New York News.
