Leoti Sorghum For Industry

Farmers having Leoti sorghum are urged to submit 1 pound samples to county agent, Lyndle Stout or chemical testing to determine the starch content. Progress on using Leoti sorghum for industrial production of starch replace cassava supplies cut off by the war was reported this week by the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture.

Only reasonably pure Leoti will yield the satisfactory starch and only a chemical test will reveal whether a seed has sufficient "waxy" character to be suitable for starch manufacture. The agricultural Experiment Station at Lincoln will make this test free of charge and county agent, Lyndle Stout is collecting samples and will submit them for farmers.

The starch is of considerable importance because it has qualities not possessed by starch of ordinary cereals and tubers. This starch is particularly suited for the manufacture of adhesives used on postage stamps and envelopes, for sizings used in textiles and paper industries, and for food in the form of tapioca. In the past most of this supply has been imported from the East Indies. Since the start of the war in the Pacific it as of course been impossible to continue imports and manufacturer's stocks are running low.

or this reason, industry has been searching for a substitute which would be as satisfactory as the starch made from the cassava plant, but more readily available. One large company has come to the conclusion that it can successfully use the product obtained from Leoti sorghum and indicated to the Nebraska Agricultural Experiment Station that they will be willing to purchase all acceptable supplies this fall. No information, however, has been given as the manner of purchase or the price that may be paid.

There is undoubtedly enough suitable seed in Nebraska to plant 150,000 to 200,000 acres in 1942. The problem is to locate this seed, that its purity by chemical methods, determine its ability to grow and make it available to growers who are in need of seed. It will be necessary to test 2,000 samples in order to locate enough satisfactory seed to plant 200,000 acres of Leoti.

A farmer who is planning to grow forage sorghum anyway, might as well plant an acceptable strain to Leoti. In this way he will be satisfying his forage requirements and will have Leoti seed to sell, should the market materialize.

Holt County farmers are urged to conserve their Leoti grain and have 1 pound samples submitted immediately to see if it is pure. County agent, Lyndle Stout will gladly give them further information.

The generally unstable livestock market conditions that developed during the latter half of last week were reflected in the prices paid here for livestock last Monday. The better grades looked about steady; plainer kinds sold slightly lower than a week ago. The quality of the offering was not as good as last week.

A few good steer calves weighing around 350 pounds sold at $13.80, but the bulk of the supplies cashed at $12.25 to $13.25. Heifers reached $12.20 on a few of the better grade. The long end of the supply moved at $11.00 to $12.00.

Yearling steers were in fair supply and bulked at $10.50 to $11.25. A few reached slightly higher. Heifers in this class sold as high as $10.50 with the long end moving at $9.50 to $10.25.

The best beef cows, weighing 1,250 pounds, sold at $9.80 but the supply was light. Others bulked mostly from $7.50 to $9.00 depending on quality. Bulls were scarce and paid up to $9.90.

A good supply of hogs was on hand. Butchers sold from $13.50 to $13.60. Sows moved at prices ranging from $13.30 to $13.45. Choice quality gilts paid from $13.75 to $14.35. Feeders went as high as $15.20 on 110 pounders with the long end cashing from $14.45 to $15.00.

The next auction, Monday, May 11.
