From now on the quantity of sugar which the grocer will be able to get from his wholesaler wil depend upon the number of stamps and sugar purchase certificates he surrenders. He will have to keep records.

The grocer must also scan his local newspaper or watch for the bulletins posted at his local rationing board from time to time in order to know about new rationing periods. He must be on the lookout for changes in rationing regulations that may be announced by OPA.

A lot more than just the equal distribution of sugar depends upon the success of the sugar rationing program. The sugar program is expected to set a pattern for possible rationing of other foods. OPA doesn't have any particular desire to ration a lot of foods, but it is quite obvious that the country's tremendous war program may produce shortages in all kinds of commodities. The corner grocer's patience with a lot of things may be a little strained before this war is over, but he'll probably be a pretty understanding fellow, anyway. He al-ways has been. And he will know Eight huge battleships are under that in his own way, he is serving
