She doesn't wear a uniform—

...but she is in the thick of war activity just the same

The telephone operator has a very important part in speeding up activities to win the war.

Many of the calls she handles help to make planes, tanks, bombs and bullets—to produce, process and transport food products—to send an ever-increasing amount of war supplies into distant lands where the war is fought.

Farms, factories, mines, mills, army camps, war plants of every kind—her fingers join one to another instantly, supplying the voice-to-voice contact which is quickening the nation's war effort.
