VOL. LXIII

NO. 34

BREEZES FROM THE SOUTHWEST

By Romaine Saunders
Atkinson, Nebr., Star Route No. 5.

Coyotes over Ray Bly's way went into the winter well fed. Seventeen head of lambs and 100 turkeys were scooped up on the Bly ranch. Mr. Bly says some of the turkeys may have been stolen, yet the hungry work of coyotes was in evidence on both turkeys and sheep.

Along with organizing and conducting the classes of a district school with a full variety of the grades, our efficient teacher, Miss Winkler, found time and had the thought to mail the season's greetings to the homes in the district. Simple, inexpensive, but through the medium of art and color embodied in a Christmas card there is the priceless touch of fellowship of friend with friend.

One of the pleasures of Yuletide came my way over at Chambers a day last week when Charley Martin hailed me and we met in the middle of the street for a handclasp accompanied by hearty words of greeting. Charley imparts a glow of friendliness that is refreshing, with a twinkle of merriment and merging into seriousness. "Worthless and good-for-nothing as I am," said Charley, "I thank the Lord that he lets me live." A lot of us with more reason might feel that way. Another old timer and substantial citizen of southern Holt, Dan Perkins, was about town the same day and gave me the glad hand. It is always a pleasure to run across Dan, whose sane outlook on life leaves its inspiration.

I don't know that I ever made a New Year's resolution. Not that I would look with contempt on those who do, but have known of men who threw away their plug of tobacco in the morning and before night were hunting for it. A resolution at any time embodies a confession that you are on a wrong course and propose to abandon it. What's wrong with that? Not a thing—only just stick to the purpose. None stand out as a paragon of perfection. Maybe January 1 is as good a time as any to "turn over a new leaf." And then "let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: fear God and keep His commandments; for this is the whole duty of man."

The grim reaper cuts deep into the ranks of enfeebled mankind during the winter months. When pneumonia lays a pale hand on one of our neighbors there is little hope that life will survive. This community learned of the death of H. L. James from this dread disease with sincere regrets. His home was in Atkinson though he retained interests in Swan precinct where he formally resided. Like all men who do things, have a mind and a purpose, he had opposers; but he had friends. As a neighbor I found Jesse warm hearted, open handed, generous, friendly and accomodating beyond what some will show. He was a native of Wales and in our rambles together along the prairie highways he would sometimes sing the Welsh songs. He had a strong baritone voice that had been trained during his youth in choir singing in the old country. Ethically and otherwise, by training and education, we were far apart on many things, but in plain line of duty and simple justice I once took his part and he never forgot it.

Freedom from want, freedom from fear, freedom of speech and freedom of religion—a large order said to be under way down at Washington to belt the whole globe. We have been at it now for ten years for our own small section of the race and have achieved neither. If we can't bring it to a hundred and thirty million people how are we to go to the two billions of groaning humanity with this fantastic program. Fear, want, persecution—a trio that has haunted the footsteps of mankind since the father and mother of the race bowed their heads in shame and walked from the garden of Eden. Our own efforts to eliminate fear have only resulted in multiplying the greatest of fears—a monumental load of debt. "The poor ye have always with you," is as true today as when Christ so stated. Our jails are scarcely ever free from some hapless and misguided chap who thinks he has a divine mission. Perhaps Mr. Wilkie thought there was something yet to do about "freedom of speech" when that egg took him in the eye during an address the last presidential campaign. Freedom from fear, from want; from persecution—ideal, grand aspirations, something men who dream may see flickering as a light in the distance but not for this present cold, heartless world.
