DO THEY REALLY?

Does Your Dog Think?

"Sport is a smart dog," said Johnny, the proud possessor of a two-year-old collie. "He can remember almost anything. Johnny is probably right. His dog is smart. But is he intelligent like Johnny? In the answer to this simple question is contained the difference between the animal and human kingdoms.

It is the human intellect that causes Johnny to long for and possess truth. The soul is thirsty and restless until it possesses the truth. Now a dog is never restless to find out that two and two is four, but Johnny may be a dog never care whether its master is a poet or a politician, a saint or a scoundrel, but Johnny does. A dog is never interested in why the sun rises and sets, but Johnny is. Johnny is interested in the "why" of everything because he is a human being. Now, you will ask, how does Johnny arrive at truth? He does this by thinking, through his intellect; by using reasoning power, a function of that spiritual part of man, the soul, which we discussed some time ago in these articles.

It may be that Johnny, after using his reason, will say that two and two is three. But he has not reached the truth. Even if Johnny is convinced that he is right, he has not necessarily arrived at the truth. So also when another Johnny in the person of a Hitler or a Stalin declares that man exists for the state, he has not arrived at the truth, for we know that the state exists for man. It is obvious that to know truth we must be guided by rules that are independent of our personal opinions, likes or dislikes.

These rules or first principles are the basis of the proper training of the intellect. These principles are the same everywhere and are always true. They connect all the branches of knowledge and enable the mind to grasp the ideas behind human activity. Without the principles the human mind would be like a newsreel, merely impressed with a series of unrelated pictures of past experience. Without these principles Johnny could be smart even as his dog Sport is smart. Unlike his dog, Johnny could even know about the great men and the important dates of history, but with all this he would not be educated in the proper sense nor be intelligent as a human being is supposed to be intelligent.

WOMEN AT WAR

Bessie

"All right, Bessie," said the boss of the little factory which was making jackets for soldiers. "Did you want to see me about something?" The thin middle-aged woman stood up from the chair in the outer office and looked earnestly at the boss with her huge, gray eyes.

"It's about this ten percent pledge," she began.

"Oh, that's all right, Bessie," the boss said. "I'd been meaning to speak to you about that. We don't expect you to pledge ten percent of your pay for War Bonds like the others are doing. We know you have a hard time making ends meet since Jake died. Eleven kids, isn't it? That's quite a lot of mouths to feed. Let's see, you make $25.50 a week including overtime, don't you?"

"Yes, sir, but . . ."

"Don't give it another thought, Bessie. You've got your hands full now. Uncle Sam knows you haven't got a penny to spare. Don't let it worry you. We understand."

The boss turned to go back into his private office. "But what I wanted to say was . . ." Bessie raised her voice and the boss looked around. "I wanted to say, would a dollar a week be too little? You see, after we get the living expenses paid, there's just about a dollar a week left. Would they be willing to accept a dollar a week?"

"They'd be more than willing," the boss said quietly. "They'd be proud."

Bessie looked relieved. "All we have to do is scrimp a little," she said. "I'd feel just terrible if we couldn't give something."

Back in the boss' office a representative of the Treasury Department was waiting. The boss shut the door and sat down. "I've just seen the greatest single sacrifice I know of," the boss said. "Listen, if you want to hear what American women are made of . . ."

(Story from an actual report in the files of the Treasury Department.)
