New War Restrictions on Telephone Service

To save scarce and critical materials for military equipment and to make sure telephone service is available for essential wartime needs, the War Production Board has issued a new order further restricting installation of telephone service. Of particular interest is that part of the Order which provides the following:

1. All telephone service installed or reconnected on or after April 15, 1943 will be on an interim basis only. This means that customers for whom service is installed or who have their telephone service moved to a new address on and after that date may have to give up their telephones if the facilities are required to provide service for persons classified as "essential users" in the War Production Board's Order.
2. Residence extension telephones, including plugs and jacks therefor, cannot be installed and cannot be reconnected for service, even though left in place by a previous user, except when essential in cases of serious illness, and then only on a temporary basis.

In addition to these limitations, there are other restrictions in the Order which may, in some instances, affect the installation of telephone service. If you plan to move or make any change in your telephone service, please get in touch with our business office to determine what services are available for your individual needs.

Your understanding and cooperation are helping greatly to meet wartime telephone needs and we feel sure you will realize that these Government restrictions are necessary to help speed the winning of the war.
