CONGRESSMAN MILLER'S WEEKLY REPORT.

Tax Measure Vetoed: In a message bristling with innuendo and caustic criticism the President took the unprecedented step of vetoing a tax bill passed under the leadership of committee chairmen of his own party. Although he did not mention it most people feel that his greatest objection was to the fact that it required labor organizations to file financial statements with the government. That feature more than anything else aroused the ire of labor lobbyists who surround the White House. Without this tax bill the government will collect almost as much money as it would with it. This will be in the form of the payroll tax for both social security purposes which automatically doubles March 1st. The practice of this administration of using that money for current expenses by the simple method of replacing it in the Social Security account with government I. O. U.'s is the reason. That account now has, by the most conservative estimates, several times as much money as will be needed for the purposes for which it was set up. That is why Congress thought it wise to freeze this payroll tax at its present level. It would seem that the attack on the complicated income tax returns was a little out of place in this message since that situation is wholly due to the revenue acts that have been passed during the years this administration has been in power and irresponsible for them. This bill has nothing to do with it. All in all the message sounds more like a campaign document of the familiar smear variety than a reasoned objection to an act of Congress.
 Baruch Reconversion Plan: The plan for reconversion of industry from wartime to peace time activity submitted by Bernard Baruch was quickly followed by the appointment of key men to administer certain phases of it. The goal of the plan is sound and the men so far chosen are able. This augurs well for the future. Experience has taught that it is an infinitely harder task to convert industry from war to peace than it is the reverse. We need only to look back to our own experience after the last war. This time the job will be much harder to accomplish because of the much greater surplus of war material we will have, and the many men and women who have been taken from their normal pursuits. If the reconversion can be made in an orderly manner, we should have a period of prosperity after the war because of the great demand that is being built up for civilian goods and services and the fact that people will have the money with which to buy them.
 The principal objection that has so far developed to the plan comes from the fear that if too much power is given the executive branch it will be administered by those who have been trained in the school of the New Deal and who have little knowledge of, and less regard for American economic practices. The first appointees will allay some of this fear.

Callers For Nebraska: Although travel conditions have restricted the number of people coming to Washington from Nebraska many still find their way here. At almost every Tuesday morning breakfast of the Nebraska delegation in Congress we have guests from the home state. This keeps us all more in touch with the ideas of the folks at home and we greatly enjoy it.
 On Monday evening, February 21st, the Nebraska Society held another party attended by between five and six hundred Nebraskans about ten per cent of those from our state who are now living in Washington.
