Mr. and Mrs. Joe Bahl received a commendation from their son, Cpl. Gerard Bahl, which he earned while with the First Army in Germany. The commendation reads as follows: "On March 9, 1945, a detachment of Co. A, 94th Signal Battalion crossed the Ludendorff bridge over the Rhine at Remagen, Germany. Early on the morning of March 10, 1945, a cable was laid over the bridge which was under constant fire from enemy artillery and aeroplanes. This historic act constituted the first crossing of the Rhine by a Signal Battalion of the U. S. Army."

"Full credit for this crossing is given to those men who performed so commendably under such hazardous conditions. The unique honor of the first crossing by elements of the Signal Battalion goes to Company A, 94th Signal Battalion."

"All officers and men of the Battalion are commended for their performance for it was the combined efforts of all which made the historic feat possible. You did the work, you deserve the credit. Signed: Lt. Col. James L. Bolt, Commanding Officer."
