Which way would YOU handle these party line problems?

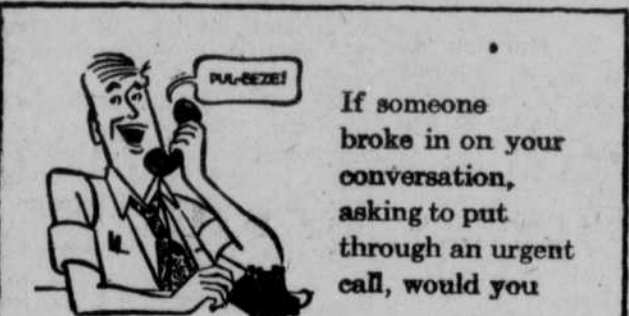

If someone were talking when you lifted the receiver, would you

- (1) Jiggle the receiver up and down to show you're in a hurry,
- (2) Join in the conversation, or
- (3) Hang up quietly and wait a few moments?

If you had a number of calls to make, would you

- (1) Make each call last as long as possible,
- (2) Let the receiver dangle while you look up numbers, or
- (3) Keep all calls short with intervals between?

If someone broke in on your conversation, asking to put through an urgent call, would you

- (1) Go right on talking,
- (2) Tell him to write a letter, or
- (3) End your conversation at once and hang up?

If you've chosen number 3 each time, you're like thousands of other experienced party-liners who know that telephone courtesy is no different from any other kind and that it pays off in better use of the line for all.

To those on party lines who prefer to have individual lines, we assure you that we are doing our best to get caught up so that we can again provide promptly whatever type of service you prefer.
