REFLECTIONS OF HOPE . . . Whenever there are bars there are hopeful, longing faces peering through them. These people are citizens of Berlin, not imprisoned but simply watching through the fence around the Allied control council in the German capital as the Allied and Soviet military governors were meeting once more in an effort to ease the dangerous situation in that city. And the anxiety on these faces is the anxiety of the world, possibly excepting the Russians, who seem to be doing all they can to promote more anxiety.
