O'Neill Man Ties for First in University of Chicago Contest

Neil F. Brennan, son of Mrs. F. N. Brennan, of O'Neill, was one of three University of Chicago students awarded the Ann Watkins fiction fellowship prizes established at the university in 1946 by Ann Watkins, Inc., literary agents in New York City, to encourage and support young American writers.

One of the first three recipients of the award, Brennan tied for the first prize of $1,500 and received $750. Robert A. Park, of Chicago, Ill., also received $750, and D. Donald Lowe, of Willard, Ut., received second prize of $500.

A 25-year-old former captain in the European theater, Brennan received his prize for his novel, "Naked to Laughter." The book is a story of disparate characters—G. I.'s, Germans, D.P.'s—in postwar Germany.

Brennan attended Rice Institute and Iowa State college before the war and was graduated from Columbus, Ga., high school. He is a brother of Mary Devine Brennan, The Frontier's Teen Tattler, and a son of the late Col. F. N. Brennan.

What's the quickest way from A to B?

SHORTEST DISTANCE between two points by telephone is sometimes a curve. Ordinarily, Mr. A's call to Mr. B would take the direct route through Bigtown. But what if every circuit into Bigtown is in use, as often happens on extra busy occasions? By switching A's call through X-Town, we often avoid the traffic jam and although the call travels over many more miles of wire, it gets through as fast and as clearly as on the normal route—and at no more cost to you.

"Circuit patches"—as they are called—are planned carefully many months in advance of need. Traffic engineers calculate the probable overflow of calls, based on past experience. Then they arrange to link several circuits together, or "patch" them, so they can instantly be cut in when needed.

Most parts of the telephone business require thinking ahead—and this is one that does.
