

LOSES ONE, OTHER 'MIGHTY WEAK' . . . Robert (Bob) Strong runs 160 head of cattle on his place 16 miles southwest of O'Neill. His blizzard trouble was typical of cattlegrowers. He hired a bulldozer to start from O'Neill for his place. The first 12 miles were fairly easy. Finally, the 'dozer crew had to head across fields, taking all night to travel two miles. The 'dozer (left background) opened a path for the trucks, which traveled four miles from highway 281 to the point shown here. At this place the feed was transferred to team and wagon for the last two miles. Mr. Strong lost only one cow, but the others are "mighty weak."—World-Herald Photo by Paul N. Williams.

Stay Up All Night to Greet 'Dozers

By Mrs. Mabel Hammerberg
Special Correspondent
CELIA—Wednesday, February 2, was a red letter day for the rural families near Celia for a road was opened by six o'clock that morning.

In spite of strong winds and swirling snow, most every family either ordered food and supplies or went into town to bring much needed food and necessities for the entire community. Grocery orders had been phoned in ahead so there need be no lost time after folks arrived in town.

Cars assembled at Alex and Paul Forsythe's home and went in a body to help one another through the snow which was rapidly filling newly opened roads.

Several made extra trips to aid stranded families and bring fuel. It is reported one family is burning new fence posts and many are rationing their fuel.

It had been three weeks since any road had been opened, then only enough to allow a few families from Celia to bring in needed supplies.

Thane Humphrey drove out early one morning and brought out supplies for the Bernard Blackmore family, who are now living on the Joe Hendrick's ranch, and are over five miles from the opened highway. He left supplies for them at the George Beck home, which is the end of the opened road.

More roads would have been opened but the strong winds hindered the drivers. Several families stayed up all night to be of service to the drivers of the bulldozers, who opened the Celia road.

That night roads were re-opened and extended farther north and many more persons were "liberated."

This storm story is just too big for one to write about hasn't gone through it. Conditions are unbelievable unless one actually sees them.

Radio and the telephone were only contacts with outside world in the Celia community for three weeks. Some haven't even received their Christmas packages, and haven't left their homes since before Christmas.

Telephone lines were kept busy, not just two persons talking but several families visiting at the same time.

Food and fuel became very scarce and rationed. Some homes were so cold they lost many eggs by freezing, and some foods were ruined. There are drifts everywhere. Those who have to move will have a hard time even finding their machinery if it isn't in a machine shed. Most of it is under the three-foot blanket of snow.

FIRST COMERS . . . These three Army Engineer bulldozers, each weighing in the neighborhood of 22 tons, were the first to reach this storm-stricken area. They were requisitioned even before Gov. Val Peterson declared an emergency existed. These 'dozers didn't get into action immediately because of the January 27-28 storm. Auxiliary equipment and civilian personnel arrived by convoy.—World-Herald Photo by Paul N. Williams.

A Letter of Appreciation

During this present emergency and the conduct of Operation Snowbound it has been very gratifying to find that the people of O'Neill have freely offered housing for all those workers coming into this area who could not obtain rooms at hotels, cabin camps and public rooming houses.

Officials of the Army, the American Red Cross and the Emergency Housing Committee wish to extend their sincere thanks to the homeowners of O'Neill who so generously offered their homes; to the American Legion for the use of the auditorium; to the schools; to the churches and the county officers who all cooperated so willingly.

While in some cases workers assigned to certain rooms did not occupy them, this was through no fault of the officials, and we regret the inconvenience caused the families involved. In other cases rooms were freely offered which were not used because all the men requesting lodging were already accommodated.

However, please remember THE EMERGENCY STILL EXISTS, and it is hoped that O'Neill home owners will continue to show the same generosity in providing rooms for those workers who come here to help our community in time of need.

—EMERGENCY HOUSING COMMITTEE.
