LIGHTER THAN MERINGUE . . . Robert Sterling, Westinghouse chemist who developed the substance, compares a chunk of his new lightweight plastic with a handful of fluffy pie meringue. Despite the difference in mass, the two balance each other at five ounces. Termed "the world's lightest solid," the new plastic foam was developed for use as an insulating material. One of its chief advantages is that it can be transported in liquid form and foamed into place whenever needed, thus saving considerable shipping space.
